FIRES 3 SHOTS; GIRL WILL DIE; MAN CAPTURED

BOSTON AMERICAN

VOL. 9—No. 165. TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1912. Registered in U. S. Patent Office. PRICE ONE CENT.

Miss Gertrude M. Jordan, twenty-five years old, of Ball square, North Somerville, was shot three times and probably fatally injured, today, in the basement of a business building at Tremont and Beacon streets.

The shots were fired by John H. Trainor, of No. 9 Hammond street, Charlestown. Trainor was arrested.

The shooting created tremendous excitement in this heart of the shopping and business district of the city.

Men and women ran excited through the streets. Some of the women were in a frantic condition.

Trainor is thirty-two years old. He walked into the building and met the young woman there. It is believed that he and she were sweethearts and that jealousy was at the bottom of the tragedy.

MAN CAPTURED BY POLICE; ACCUSED OF TORTURING GIRL

John McDonald of No. 8 Forest street, Roxbury, a widower with three children, was arrested this afternoon on suspicion, in connection with the kidnaping of five-year-old Catherine Dalton of No. 1 Winslow street, Roxbury.

Catherine is back home with a pitiful story of being kept in a room over night by a man who, as she says, "stuck pins in my legs."

PRISONER EMPLOYE OF CITY.

McDonald is employed by the sewer department of the city of Boston.

He was arrested at the corner of E and Summer streets, South Boston, by Patrolman McCarthy and another policeman from Dudley street police station.

He was taken to the police station where he was held for identification. A policeman was sent to Winslow street to have Catherine Dalton and neighbors, who saw her talking with a strange man yesterday, come to the station and see if they recognize McDonald.

Catherine says that a man took her, by a roundabout way, to a house on Forest street, kept her all night and started back with her this morning as far as the corner of Eustis and Winslow streets.

Neighbors Give Chase.

The man was spied on the corner by neighbors, men and women, including Catherine's father, James Dalton. They chased him an eighth of a mile. Running for his very life, the man escaped around the corner of Dearborn and Dudley street.

After Catherine had been taken home, soothed and fed, she guided a Boston AMERICAN reporter to a lodging house on Forest street, where she said she was taken by the strange man. The child was too frightened, on approaching the house, to go in.

She was taken to Dudley street police station where Captain Goodwin heard her story, also that of her cousin, Miss Mary White of No. 7 Winslow street, who had helped chase the strange man. Captain Goodwin sent Patrolman McCarthy out with Catherine, to see if the child would go back to the same house on Forest street.

McCarthy, to test the five-year-old's story, took her to Forest street by a different way, down Vine street.

But, in front of the very same lodging house, Catherine stopped and identified the place, trembling violently and pale with recollection of her terrific night in there.

Girl Points Out Room.

Patrolman McCarthy went in. The landlady denied stoutly that any of her lodgers was involved.

Then the reporter and the policeman persuaded Catherine to come in the house.

"Show us the room where you were last night, Catherine," they said to her.

Catherine led them up to the very attic, to a small room with red walls, a single bed and an alarm clock on the bureau.

"This is where I slept last night," she said. "I remember the alarm clock and the red walls."

Then, with the reporter and policeman acting as occasional question, Catherine

STOLEN CHILD IN MOTHER'S ARMS.

When 5-year-old Catherine Dalton was restored to her mother's arms, in Roxbury, Mrs. Dalton was overcome with joy, after an all-night anxiety for her little girl who had been carried off by a strange man.

GET ROSENTHAL MAN ABROAD

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—William J. Flynn has resigned from the U. S. secret service. It is understood Flynn will take personal charge of the Rosenthal murder inquiry and the graft investigation in New York.

LIVERPOOL, England, Sept. 3.—Thomas Coupe, who is wanted in New York by District Attorney Whitman, as a material witness in the Rosenthal case, arrived today from the Cunard liner Lusitania and was immediately placed under surveillance by the police.

Coupe was night clerk in the Elks' club in New York and saw the actual killing of Rosenthal by gangsters who subsequently escaped in an automobile. Recently he disappeared, but Mr. Whitman's detectives traced him on board the ship and Scotland yard and other police bureaus throughout England were notified to be on the watch. When Coupe was taken to the police station here by two detectives he was told that District Attorney Whitman wanted him to return to New York. Coupe evaded a direct answer, saying that he must consult with his friends before he could say whether or not he would go back.

Powerful Influence.

By this action Coupe aroused the suspicion that influence of the most powerful kind had been brought to bear upon him to have him stay away from New York until after the trial of the men indicted for Rosenthal's murder.

Coupe refused to discuss this phase of the case but denied that his sudden departure from New York had been forced or otherwise brought about by outside agencies.

"I'm Not Going Back."

Coupe left Liverpool this afternoon for Preston, Lancashire, where his father owns a big dry goods business. Before going he said:

"I am not going back to New York. The police, who are the only people who could protect me, are in reality my enemies. I doubt very much whether or not they are really anxious to get me back.

"I have been night manager of an expensive hotel in New York, and I know something of life there. There's hardly a policeman to be relied upon. I have now made my pile and am glad to be once more at home among my friends. I shall certainly not return to America unless my friends advise me to."

BECKER LOSES FIGHT FOR DELAY; ON TRIAL BEFORE GOFF, SEPT. 12

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—Lieutenant Charles A. Becker, accused of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, lost a fight to delay his trial when arraigned before Justice Goff of the Supreme Court today.

His counsel, Attorney McIntyre, asked a postponement, but was overruled, after the police lieutenant was ordered to plead to the indictment. Becker entered a plea of not guilty and Justice Goff set Sept. 12 as the date of trial.

A motion was made by Becker's counsel for an inspection of the Grand Jury minutes and to dismiss the indictment against the prisoner for murder. This will be heard by Justice Goff immediately before the trial on September 12. McIntyre characterized the setting of Becker's trial at such an early date as a great injustice, and, on a procedure unheard of in the annals of criminal jurisprudence.

QUINCY COLLECTS $20 FOR A "TURKEY TROT"

Charles Mullaly of No. 166 Billings road, Quincy, has the distinction of being one of a very few that have danced the turkey trot in the Squantum Yacht Clubhouse. He paid Judge Albert Avery $20 today in the Quincy Court for dancing it. The club holds weekly dances and many of the collegians and Summer folk along the Wollaston beach and Squantum shore attend. Harvey Lock, the floor director, sought out Mr. and Mrs. Mullaly on the dance floor and said: "No turkey trot at these dances." Mullaly stopped the dance just long enough to hit Mr. Lock in the face and today paid the fine.

WOMAN PASSENGER ON LONGEST FLIGHT

PARIS, Sept. 3.—In the longest flight ever attempted by a passenger-carrying aeroplane, Aviator Astley left Issy today with Miss Mary Elizabeth Davies, bound for Berlin and Warsaw, in an endeavor to capture the Pommery prize.

SUSPECT TAKEN AS ASSAILANT

Charged with an assault with intent to kill Maurice Reidy, a Cambridge contractor, Salvatore Cunsoli, aged twenty-two, of Spring court, Watertown, was arrested in Jamaica Plain today by Sergeant Edward Welch and Patrolman Powers of the Cambridge police. The assault took place Saturday evening on Massachusetts avenue, North Cambridge, while Reidy was walking down the avenue with his daughter Mary, aged nineteen, and his niece. A man crept up behind Reidy and slashed him four times with a razor. Miss Reidy turned just in time to see the razor and threw herself upon the man to shield her father. The man broke away from the girl and ran away towards Somerville. Reidy was rushed to the Cambridge Hospital.

CHILD STARVER IS GIVEN A YEAR

Charged with the wilful neglect of his four children, Louis E. Walkins of "The Bridgewater House of Mystery," who was arrested on Saturday at Bridgewater after his half-starved little ones had been taken in charge by the State Board of Charity, was today sentenced to a year in the House of Correction in the Brockton police court.

The chief evidence against the prisoner was given by Frank LeBarron of the Bridgewater police force and Cheney G. Jones, an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. They told how they had investigated the charges and found them true.

Nothing was found in the house with the exception of some rotten apples. Not a crust of bread was discovered. The children were whitefaced with hunger.

Pitiful notes had been written by the little ones and lowered from windows on the second floor of the house begging for food—even a piece of dry bread.

Two of the Walkins children died within three years, and it is believed that lack of care and attention had something to do with it.

Walkins was said to be able to support his family decently, but was the victim of a belief that resulted in starving them. The head of the house made his escape through a back door when the police and society agents appeared to take the children.

Walkins was arrested through his boast that he had fooled the police. Constable Sunet heard the boast. He said to Walkins:

"What's your name, Mister?"

"Louis Walkins," replied the unsuspicious man.

"Then you're my prisoner," replied the constable.

Walkins was taken to Bridgewater and locked up until today.

Sox-Yankees Game Off—Play It Here

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—The final game between the Red Sox and Yankees, scheduled for this afternoon, was called off on account of wet grounds. Since this is the last Red Sox series scheduled here, the game was transferred to Boston, and will be played in the final series in that city, September 24, 25 and 26, during which two double-headers will have to be arranged, making five games in all in the Fenway Park season's windup. This gives Boston also more Boom games, instead of eight.

MRS. MOORE, 70, OF NEWTON, TO WED C. F. BUFFUM, 77

Mrs. Ellen Maria Moore, aged seventy years, of No. 18 Meredith street, Newton Highlands, and Charles F. Buffum, seventy-seven, a wealthy retired undertaker of Salem, will be married on Saturday evening at the home of Mrs. Moore's son, Frederick. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. George G. Phipps, retired pastor of the Newton Highlands Congregational church.

Mrs. Moore and Mr. Buffum are cousins. Mrs. Buffum died a year ago while Mr. Moore has been dead twelve years. Mrs. Moore has three children, sons, Frederick, forty, W., thirty-seven, and Frank B., thirty-two.

MANY TESTIFY IN CASE OF M'KEOWN

Benjamin Pearson of Waltham street, Boston, and Joseph P. Smith of Springfield, members of the American Benefit Association, were before Judge Murray in the Municipal Court this afternoon on the charge of assaulting Robert McKeown in the rooms of the organization, No. 6 Beacon street, this city, last Thursday afternoon. A large number of witnesses were heard. McKeown is a member of the order.

Gov. Foss and the German Emperor, King Edward VII and General Booth visited the Charles Ship. Why don't you?

THREE MEN PLEAD NOT GUILTY IN BOMB PLOT

William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Company, and one of the most prominent woolen manufacturers in the United States, Frederick E. Atteaux, a wealthy dye manufacturer and a cemetery trustee of Boston, and Dennis J. Collins, a Cambridge dog fancier, were today arraigned in the Suffolk Superior Court, charged with "planting" dynamite in Lawrence at the time of the recent strike in a conspiracy to injure the strikers and others.

The three prisoners finally pleaded "not guilty," although when Collins was first asked by the clerk how he pleaded he made the reply:

"I am guilty, I guess—the way they've put it up to me."

Wood and Atteaux were each held in $5,000 bail, which they furnished immediately. Collins was held in $5,000 on the charge of conspiracy and $1,000 additional for transporting dynamite illegally. He could not furnish bail and was locked up in the Charles street jail.

It was said about the court house that Collins would probably be used as a witness in the case. This, in a way, would explain his partial admission of guilt.

May Affect Election.

The holding of these three men, two of whom are wealthy and powerful, and the taking up of the case by the federal government, are the sensational echoes of the big textile battle that attracted nation-wide attention and comment.

It was generally believed that the fight, and the facts that came out, would have a bearing on the coming Presidential election.

Wood was arraigned alone, immediately after the opening of court. Atteaux and Collins were brought into court an hour and a half later.

There was nothing of the spectacular about the arraignment of the mill owner. Few persons were in the courtroom. Mr. Wood, with his counsel, Samuel L. Powers, and James N. Clark, of Mr. Powers' office, entered at 9:45 o'clock. Mr. Powers and Mr. Clark sat within the bar enclosure. Mr. Wood took his place on the bench reserved for witnesses. He wore a gray suit and carried a straw hat.

The whole proceeding took but a few moments. Clerk John Manning called:

"William M. Wood."

Mr. Wood stepped to the bar. He was quite unmoved and gazed about the room, at the clerk and at Judge Raymond.

"William M. Wood," began Clerk Manning, "what say you to this indictment? Are you guilty or not guilty?"

"I am not guilty," was Mr. Wood's reply. It was spoken in a firm, clear voice. He was grave and decorous, as befitted the proceedings.

$5,000 Bond Continued.

Mr. Lavelle, the Assistant District Attorney, spoke:

"The $5,000 bail in which the defendant is now held is a satisfactory amount to the District Attorney."

That was all. The millionaire's bonds were fixed in the same amount, and he left the courtroom with his attorney.

Atteaux and Collins were arraigned at the same time. Atteaux stood like a mountain towering over the smaller men. With Atteaux was Lawyer Daniel Coakley. When asked to plead Atteaux said:

"Not guilty."

Coakley said: "I reserve the right to change this plea so that I may have an opportunity to examine the indictment."

Assistant District Attorney Lavelle, who was in court, said that he had no objections. The prisoner's bail was fixed at $5,000. The bail was furnished by Charles E. Phipps of Brookline and Fred M. Lawson, manager of the Old Colony Trust Company. The surety gives consisted of stocks, bonds and real estate.

Collins was asked whether he pleaded guilty or not guilty to the indictment against him.

"I have no counsel," replied the prisoner.

Man with $1,012 in His Pockets Sent to House of Correction

Malcolm Ferguson faced Judge Bruce in Malden District Court today on a charge of intoxication. He is fifty years old—at that age when a man cannot get work easily.

He was out of work.

He had no home.

All he had in the wide world between him and sheer starvation was ONE THOUSAND AND TWELVE DOLLARS AND SIXTY-THREE CENTS.

"Your Honor," said Patrolman Durning, "when I found this man he had money enough to fill a valise. His pockets bulged with big and little bills."

Ferguson explained to Judge Bruce: "I am not working. I just sold my home. That's where I got the money."

Judge Bruce gave him five days in the House of Correction to get back in shape again so he can invest his money.

TAFT KEPT FROM MORNING GOLF BY SPRAINED ANKLE

President Taft suffered today at his Beverly home from a slight sprain to his right ankle. For the first time since he came to Beverly this Summer he was unable to play his morning game of golf.

The President was at Myopia yesterday, and after one round chasing the little round ball he complained of his ankle. It had given him trouble last year. Major Rhoads, his aid and a noted surgeon, advised the President to go home and rest. As a result of this advice the President did not attend the Myopia horse fair yesterday afternoon as he had intended.

The ankle didn't feel very good today, and more rest was advised. It was said that the President would be able to come to Boston this afternoon and address the postal clerks at their Faneuil Hall convention. He dines at the Algonquin Club and goes to Washington tonight.

GREAT COLUMBUS DAY DAY PARADE PLANS NOW UNDER WAY

A great military, naval, civic and feature parade is being planned by John F. Dever, chairman of public celebrations, for Columbus Day, Saturday, October 12.

From 50,000 to 60,000 people are expected in line. Regular troops and militia and a navy division will be features.

The Citizens' Public Celebration Association is planning the program. The announcement from Director Dever reads:

"It is desired that this parade be made of a character that the plan provides for making prominent the educational, patriotic and historical elements appropriate to the anniversary of the discovery of America. It is desired that every group of Boston residents assist."

AMERICANS FEAR MASSACRE BY THE MEXICAN REBELS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—Brigadier-General Walter H. Sqinyier, sent from California to the western Mexican border to investigate conditions, reported to the War Department today that the situation south of the Arizona and New Mexican border is most grave.

General Schuyler said that hundreds of Americans at El Tigre, Cananea and Nacozari are in danger of being massacred by the rebels, who are cutting telegraph lines, destroying railroads, showing great hostility toward foreigners.

General Schuyler also transmits an appeal for aid from an American doctor named Ricketts at Cananea, who urges that arms and ammunition be sent the Americans there.

Five hundred refugees have crossed into Texas within the past forty-eight hours.

CRUISER LANDS 750 MARINES AT CORINTO

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—The cruiser California, flagship of the Pacific fleet, arrived at Corinto today, according to Navy Department dispatches. The 750 marines, which she carried from Panama City, were landed at once and a large force started inland with a second convoy of provisions and ammunition for Americans at Metalgalpa and other interior Nicaraguan points.

United States Will Not Submit Canal Case to The Hague

WASHINGTON, September 3.—The United States will not consent to the submission of the Panama Canal toll question to The Hague court of arbitration whether Great Britain demand this action or not.

This was learned at the State Department today, following the receipt of dispatches from the American Embassy at London detailing the British government's attitude in the matter and giving the comments of the British press.

The direct intimation in advance of any request from England for arbitration on the Panama Canal matter that such a request would be refused, caused the utmost surprise here, being almost without precedent in American history.

Not to Wait for Knox.

It had been suspected that if such a request were made the return of Secretary Knox from Japan would be awaited before reaching a decision. The action of the department, now headed by Acting Secretary of State Huntington Wilson, indicates that President Taft is himself directing the conduct of America's side of the dispute.

That the United States and England are now engaged in a masterly diplomatic struggle is the general belief here. The steps thus far taken may be summarized as follows:

England's protest against Panama Canal bill.

Passage of bill and its signature by President.

"Announcement" that England will demand arbitration.

Disavowal of announcement by British government.

America's declaration against arbitration.

While no official intimation of the English government's next move has reached Washington, it was stated today that the United States is fully prepared itself to offset any action.

Acting Secretary of State Huntington Wilson declined to discuss the matter in his official capacity, but he called attention to article one of the arbitration con-

SIGHT-SEEING AUTO CRASHES INTO TEAM, INJURING DRIVER

A sight-seeing auto collided with a team on Park street, Charlestown, today, and then crashed into a post. There were fifteen passengers in the sight-seeing car.

Nathan Katz of No. 141 Third street, Chelsea, the driver of the team, was thrown from his seat and badly shaken. He was hurried to the Relief Hospital, Boston, in the police ambulance.

The auto was on its way to Bunker Hill. None of the passengers was injured.

LYNN REAL ESTATE MAN CHARGED WITH LARCENY OF $3,800

Three warrants were issued today for the arrest of William P. Carroll, a prominent Lynn real estate dealer, charging him with the larceny of $1,000 from Mr. Mary Flynn of North Common street, Lynn; $1,800 from James Schulcraft of No. 62 Silsbee street, Lynn, and $1,000 from Victor Chousky of Saugus.

The warrants are the result of various real estate transactions.

ERIE CANAL BREAK CAUSES NEW FLOOD

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The Erie Canal broke its banks 500 feet west of Bushnell's Basin this forenoon at the same spot where the break occurred a year ago. All the new work and reinforced concrete put in by the State at that time, is washed away, and a large area is under water. The canal will be out of service for a long time.

AQUARIUM OPENING DELAYED BY STRIKE

Because of a strike of long standing by the ironworkers of Boston, which tied up the work on the new aquarium at Marine Park, the opening of that newest of city buildings has been delayed and unless the strike is settled soon it will not be opened until Spring.

LIGHT VOTE IN VERMONT

MONTPELIER, Vt., Sept. 3.—Reports from various districts, particularly in the northern and central parts, indicate that an exceedingly light vote is being cast in the State election today. A cold, raw wind accompanied by occasional showers, is responsible, according to many of the political leaders, thousands of voters remaining away from the polls.

In Burlington, Montpelier and Barre the voting up to noon was very dull. The Socialists appeared to be making great gains over former years.

In the country districts, where it was expected the Progressive party would make tremendous inroads upon the G. O. P., the reports received at noon were very discouraging to the Moose leaders.

The country roads are in a wretched condition owing to the three days of rain. This, it is said, will aid the Democrats.

In all the cities and towns automobiles and carriages are being used by the leaders in an attempt to get the vote out.

In the city of Burlington forty automobiles are being driven about the city and far into the country district for the purpose of conveying the older men to the polls.

Even these tactics have failed up to noon to get out the vote. The polls will close at 5 p. m., and it is believed that it will be early morning before any accurate returns are received which will indicate the way Vermont has voted on the Governorship or on Presidency.

U. S. TO STAND FIRM ON CANAL

vention with Great Britain ratified in 1908, which reads:

Affects Vital.

Differences which may arise of a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of treaties between the two contracting parties, and which it is not possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague, provided they do not affect the vital interests, the independence or the honor of the two contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third parties.

The question of permitting American coastwise vessels to pass through the canal free of toll would appear, at first glance, to come under this article of the convention. But the State Department has prepared and is ready to submit lengthy arguments showing the subject is, in reality, one which is not covered by the convention, inasmuch as it affects the "vital interests" of the United States through the American merchant marine, and also concerns the interests of third parties, France, Italy, Germany and Japan being as much concerned in the free passage through the canal as is Great Britain.

Government to "Stand Pat."

Armed with these arguments, the United States will fight the controversy on the question to The Hague, spurred on by the attacks on President Taft and the latter's position by the foreign press, which are appearing in the British press, and which the State Department freely designates as "disgraceful and totally uncalled for."

Had Great Britain treated the matter calmly and deliberately, diplomats here say, the United States probably would have met her half way and consented to submit the matter to arbitration. As it is this government will "stand pat," though no foreign interference will be built the canal, run it and rule it as it sees fit.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—An official statement issued by the government today declares that the announcement that England will demand reference of the Panama Canal issue to The Hague is "inaccurate and premature." It is further stated that "the government's line of action is now being considered."

Despite this statement, officialdom generally is of the opinion that Great Britain will demand an opinion on the canal treaty by an international court of inquiry.

The United States acquiescence is a matter which the shrewdest diplomats are at sea on. President Taft is a disciple of arbitration, but The Hague would have a preponderance of foreigners who might be counted upon to decide against the United States because their own interests are identical with those of England in its

Why Government Will Do.

The United States District Attorney says he is not sure yet how far his inquiry will extend. It is thought the investigation will centre largely in trading the freight car supposed to contain dynamite. It is said, however, that if the Federal laws are found to have been broken in the actual planting of the explosive that also will come in for attention on the part of Mr. French.

It is understood the dynamite found in the freight car at Philadelphia was not labelled, and probably on that point will hang the Federal prosecution, if the District Attorney decides he has sufficient grounds on which to proceed.

oner who was very nervous and seemed helpless as he stood before the court.

"Do you plead guilty or not guilty?" replied the clerk.

"I am guilty, I guess—the way it's put up to me," he replied.

Plea is Changed.

The clerk asked the question a third time and Mr. Lavelle came to the distressed dog fancier's aid.

"Your honor," said Lavelle, "inasmuch as the prisoner has no counsel I suggest that a plea of not guilty be entered for him."

This was done and his bail fixed at $6,000.

Attaeux was very calm throughout the ordeal. When asked to make a statement about the charges against him he said:

"My counsel tells me that it is unwise for me to give any statement to the press. There are many things I'd like to say, but I take my lawyer's advice and refrain.

"I ask suspension of the public judgment until all the facts are known. They'll come out at the proper time and place."

Attaeux came from his home in Newton early today and went to the office of Daniel Coakley in the Pemberton Building. There he remained in conference with the lawyer most of the forenoon. The accused mercenary and cemetery trustee of Boston and his lawyer then went to police headquarters.

Attaeux is a very large man, over six feet tall and weighing something like 240 pounds. He was dressed in dark clothing. He was lame and walked with the aid of a cane. He fell a few days ago at his home and sprained a tendon in one leg. This was the reason, it is understood, that he did not surrender last week when Wood did.

Get into Wrong Office.

Coakley led Attaeux into the Licensing Board by mistake. This may have been confusion as a result of the attack by the battery of cameras. They came out and were directed to the offices of Chief McCarl, where Attaeux surrendered to the Chief and to Inspector Lynch. The indictment warrants in connection with the dynamite cases were placed in the hands of Lynch.

The prisoner was booked. He gave his age as fifty-eight and said he lived on Newton street, Brookline. He was charged with conspiracy to plant dynamite in Lawrence for the purpose of injuring strikers and others, just as Wood was.

Asa F. French, United States District Attorney, is also busy on the Lawrence dynamiting cases.

"We are going after the violation of interstate laws," is the way he describes the course which the United States Government will pursue in dealing with the Lawrence cases. Information for the guidance of the Federal authorities has been collected quietly for some time. It is supposed the search has a large amount of evidence already at hand and the Government agents are busy getting more.

HUNT MAN IN KIDNAP CASE

told her pitiful story. After it was heard Patrolman McCarthy took Catherine and Miss White to Roxbury District Court.

Catherine Dalton's story, told in her childish way, with some repetitions, is as follows:

"This strange man came along the street (Winslow) yesterday afternoon. He offered me some money to go with him. He said I didn't want to 'cause mamma said not to go away with strange people.

"But he seemed nice. He took me by the hand and we went away around by fences and fields and then came back to this house. He led me upstairs and gave me some candy—and chocolates it was.

Tortured With Pins.

"I was afraid and began to cry, I didn't want to go into the house. He went up to the top room. It was all red on the walls. There was a clock on the table. This is the room. (She was in the room at the time.)

"There was another little girl there, too. I don't know her name. She was bigger'n me. She was frightened, but wasn't so frightened as me.

"He didn't bother her but he stuck pins all over my legs. See the marks here.

"Catherine showed her little skirts and showed pin-pricks on her legs above her knees.)

"I wanted to go home to my mamma. When I cried he put his hand over my mouth.

"He put us to bed. I got hungry and asked for something to eat but he wouldn't give me anything, and I wanted a drink of water, too. Then I fell asleep.

"This morning he took me by the hand and left me at the corner and said he would give me candy if I went right home. I was awful hungry and was glad to see Mamma gain."

Gave Little Girl Candy.

Catherine's story has been substantiated in greater part by neighbors. Arthur Perry of No. 5 Winslow street, ten years old, heard the strange man offer Catherine candy and saw him lead her away.

Miss Mary White, Catherine's eighteen-year-old cousin, saw Catherine talking on Winslow street with the same man. She thought he was a nice-appearing man at the time. She thought he was some neighbor who knew the child.

"He was about thirty-five years old," says Miss White, "with a black moustache. He was tall and slender. He wore dark clothes and a derby hat."

Miss White saw the man again today when he brought Catherine back to the corner of Eustis and Winslow street. She was one of the crowd which started in pursuit when the man fled.

Catherine's story of being taken "over fences and fields" is corroborated by the bright freshness of the Chadwick Lead Works on Southampton street. At 5:30 last night he was seen by a man who, answering the description in this case walking along toward South Boston. The child was hanging back. The watchman thought it was an ordinary case of a father making his child go home.

This morning, when he saw the newspaper accounts of the kidnaping, he reported his observation to the police of the Dudley street station. This sent the police scouring South Boston. The man had purposely taken a roundabout way to his lodgings but, when he brought Catherine home this morning, he went the shortest way, via Dearborn and Eustis streets, so Catherine was able to retrace her steps easily.

When the man came to the corner of Eustis and Winslow streets he was purposely to go farther. He told Catherine to "run right home." But he narrowly escaped capture at that.

Arthur Perry and his mother, Margaret Perry, next door neighbor of the Daltons, saw Catherine and the man on the corner. Arthur Perry recognized him at a glance and told his mother. Mrs. Perry and Arthur ran toward the corner.

At the same time Mary White, who was near the Dalton house, saw them. She ran toward Catherine.

Blacksmith Gives Chase.

The stranger fled, putting his soul into his heels. A blacksmith on the opposite corner, who knows Catherine by sight and is fond of her, saw the child, saw the man running and guessed the situation. The blacksmith gave chase.

At this moment James Dalton, Catherine's father, came down Eustis street. He had been out hunting for the child with the new Chadwick. Catherine ran to her, saw the commotion up the street, threw off his coat for better speed and started along.

When Dalton saw that pursuit was hopeless he returned to Catherine, picked her up, ran for home and put the child in her mother's arms.

Escapes Pursuers.

The fugitive, meanwhile, had fled along Eustis street around the corner of Dearborn and then into Dudley street where he escaped. The pursuit had swelled till thirty-five or forty men, women and boys were afoot. Once the fugitive was nearly blocked by a young man, but he bowled the latter over and kept on.

At home Catherine was comforted, quieted and fed. Catherine and she could tell the house where she was taken. The child led the reporter and her cousin to the Forest street lodging house.

N. H. PRIMARIES UNCONTESTED ON HEADS OF TICKS

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 3.—Republican and Democratic leaders predicted a light vote in the State primaries today. There are no contests for the Governorship. Franklin Worcester of Hollis is the Republican candidate. Samuel D. Felker is his opponent on the Democratic ticket. In the Congressional balloting also all is smooth sailing. The Republican candidates are Congressmen Cyrus A. Sulloway and Frank D. Currier. The Democrats are ex-Mayor Eugene E. Reed of Manchester and Raymond B. Stevens of Landaff.

In the five councillor districts there are spirited fights between the State regulars and Progressives on the Republican side. There are contests also for State Senatorial nominations among the Republicans. The Democratic State convention will be held September 24.

WILSON ODDS GO UP; TAFT CHARGES LESS

LONDON, Sept. 3.—The Times says that numerous orders from the United States were again received yesterday by brokers at Lloyds in connection with the forthcoming presidential election. To pay the total loss should Wilson be elected as much as 75 per cent. is quoted, compared with 60 per cent. quoted a week ago, so that on the basis of these rates Wilson's prospects are thought to have improved. Twenty-five per cent. was accepted to cover the payment of claims should Taft be chosen, as compared with 30 per cent. a week ago. The rate to cover the return of Roosevelt remained only 20 per cent.

PALE AND SICKLY BOYS AND GIRLS

Youth is the time to lay the foundation for health. Every boy and girl should have plenty of pure, red blood and strong nerves. With thin, impure blood, they start life with a handicap too great to win success and happiness. Pure, red blood means healthful growth, strong nerves, clear brain and a good digestion. In a word pure blood is the foundation of health.

The pale, irritable boy or girl, who has no appetite or ambition, is sleepless, always tired out, melancholy, short of breath and who does not grow strong, is the victim of bloodlessness, the greatest enemy of youth.

There is just one thing to do for these boys and girls—build up the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. You can't afford to experiment with unproven remedies. Through neglect or wrong treatment anaemia gradually develops into the pernicious form which is incurable. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills work directly on the blood, cleansing it and giving it just the elements which it lacks. As the pure blood goes everywhere, the entire body, every nerves, muscle and tissue, shares in the health-giving properties of the pills.

Mrs. C. P. Hanville, whose address is R. F. D. No. 2, Milan, Ohio, says:

"I had been almost an invalid for years and was thin from my girlhood. I was anemic and my blood was turning to water. My heart troubled me a great deal and would beat so fast at times that I could hardly stand it. I became very weak and thin and was reduced in weight from 130 pounds to 90 and my complexion was yellow. My family and friends thought I was going into a decline. I was in bed for six weeks at one time and was unable to do my housework for over a year.

"I was told by a doctor that I was suffering from anaemia and could live only a short time if I did not get help. I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and soon began to have an appetite. It seemed as though I could not eat enough. My strength gradually returned and I had a good color. I gained 30 pounds in weight and have been well since."

A free booklet, "Building Up the Blood," will be sent on request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Mackie, Pardoned 'Lifer,' Arraigned

Former Convict, Freed by Foss, Charged with Attempted Burglary.

Released in 1911 After Long Fight by His Mother and Sister.

When John Mackie was released from a life sentence in Charlestown State prison a year ago in July he declared that rather than do another wrong he would jump into the Charles River. But he said also:

"But if prison is intended to make a bad man a good citizen, then the efforts are a failure. My eighteen years (in prison) have hurt me rather than reformed me."

Florence Mackie, who helped secure life termer's release.

As an exemplification of the truth of his assertion, Mackie was today arraigned in the Municipal Court charged with attempted burglary and with having been caught with burglars' tools in his possession.

The story of the long fight for the release of Mackie, who had been sentenced to prison for life for murder, made by his mother, who had never wavered in her faith in him, his sister who loved him and whose work in his behalf had much to do with the clemency exercised by Governor Foss and by others interested in the case, is pathetic—doubly so in the light of the fact that all of their solicitude seems to have been in vain.

Arrest Due to Two Girls.

Mackie lives at No. 9 Wellington street. His sister, Miss Florence Mackie, a beautiful, talented girl, is a stage favorite. The arrest of the young man was due chiefly to the alertness of Miss Maud Wood and her sister, Miss Sarah Wood, of No. 1 Wellington street. They called the police on the telephone and Mackie was followed home from a store which it is claimed he tried to enter.

The charge against him is that he tried to break and enter the liquor store of Frank Kenney at No. 557 Columbus avenue, and the fruit store at No. 770 Tremont street. In the liquor store $25 in cash had been stolen with goods that made the total loss $100. The Wood girls live near the Kenney store and had heard of the burglary. That was the reason they were on the qui vive for a repetition of it.

Mackie is now forty years old. When twenty-two years old he was arrested for murder. It was charged that he killed Mrs. Mercy L. Kendall while attempting to break into and rob her home in Indiana place. His lawyer asked him to plead at the trial. Mackie, turning to his mother, asked:

"Mother, which shall it be, yes or no?" no?"

"Yes, John," replied the heart-broken mother.

He pleaded guilty, was sentenced to prison for life.

Spectre Haunts Sister.

Growing into young and beautiful womanhood, Florence Mackie always had this spectre before her eyes—her brother, John was in prison.

Her mother never forgot it—never ceased to work for his release. The sister joined in the fight and it was a happy day on July 12 of last year when the sister took the pardon to the prison and then took her brother home to their mother. The Boston newspapers printed photographs of the released man and his sister in the carriage in which they were driven to their home. Too mother was more than eighty years old. It was the most joyous day of her life, she said.

Mackie, writing for the AMERICAN at the time, in addition to the remarks quoted, made this statement:

"I have not the slightest dread of any person in the world—thanks to my having become hardened to the loss of freedom. In closing I will say that I defy any living soul to point to John Mackie at any time or any place and say, 'There is an illustration of the impracticability of pardoning a criminal.'

"I'll never do another wrong thing and I'll prevent many and many a fellow from doing as I had to do—go to prison to find out that there is love, kindness and a square deal waiting for every one from people outside of his family and intimate friends."

CRAIG PLAYERS SCORE SUCCESS

When Mr. John Craig conceived the idea of building up a theatrical company in Boston that would be able to give good, wholesome, clean amusement to the people for small cost, he had in his mind something like the system that "The Fortune Hunter" took with him when he left New York and sought a small country town with the intention of making "a million in a year."

Mr. Craig presented "The Fortune Hunter" at the Castle Square Theatre yesterday afternoon and evening to audiences that occupied every seat and overflowed into the available standing room. This play, presented before in this city at a higher priced theatre, seemed not to the large audiences. It is an appealing play. Well written, filled with real laughs and moments that bring one to the verge of tears, finely staged and splendidly acted, it brought Mr. Craig and his wonderfully able corps of performers as often to the footlights between the acts that the bubbling of their joy was reflected in the outbursts of applause.

Mr. Craig made a speech. Miss Young made a speech. Mr. Meek made a speech. They talked as though they were standing in a parlor at the home of a friend and speaking heart-to-heart. The hero of "The Fortune Hunter," knowing nothing of country towns—indeed, knowing little of anything that was worth while—after a year of hard, useful work, began to like it. The system built better than he knew. It may be that Mr. Craig's dream of a theatre is greater in realization than conception. It is certain that the great throngs that go to his theatre every day have taken him and his company into their hearts. Mr. Craig presents in American comedy this and next week.

CLEVER LIST OF FUNMAKERS SEEN AT NATIONAL THEATRE

All roads led to the National Theatre last night. When 8 was time for it certain to rise the immense playhouse was packed to its capacity. The holiday patrons were kept laughing and applauding all through the show by the merry pranks that the funmakers set.

Marion Murray and her company of comedians in Rozeman Bugler's latest success, "A Big Bluff," were given a distinguished welcome. Warren and Frost, introducing Miss Edith Frost of Roxbury, who has a charming operatic soprano voice, made a distinct hit. Sully and Hussey, among the cleverest funmakers seen on the vaudeville stage this season, played their lively act, "The Sportsman and His Valet."

Holmes and Wells, in their clever diversion, "Just Because," made a hit; Lew Fitzgibbons played the xylophone; the Four Regals were applauded for their skill and daring, and the songfest made a hit as usual.

ANY one can mix tobacco, but to blend tobaccos, and have it mean something, is a high art. You'll like this mild, exquisite "Turkish-blend" that's so popular throughout this country. 20 delightful—plain package—therefore only 15 cents.

MISS ROSE STAHL STARS AT PARK

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

Now is the time for the Tessies, The Imogenes and the Maggies of the big stores to see themselves as Charles Klein sees them.

"Maggie Pepper" went straight from the stage to the gallery with a single bound at the Park Theatre last evening, with the entire suit and cloak department trailing behind. There were tears and laughter in the gallery that reached to the first balcony, and there was a riot of laughter on the first floor that must have made Rose Stahl feel that she was among friends.

And doubtless she was, for the big audience opened wide its arms to receive her.

She was a plain young woman of a department store—this Maggie Pepper—but in Miss Stahl's hands she was as human as the girl at the ribbon counter, on the third aisle to the left. The department store and the drama clasped hands in Mr. Klein's "Maggie Pepper," and from the viewpoint of those privileged to see the theatre as a means of entertainment it was a happy union.

Demanded One's Attention.

Miss Stahl, who never seems quite herself except when brushing against the every-day life of untrained people, was as faithful to Maggie in Mr. Klein's play as she was to Patricia O'Brien in "The Chorus Lady." Miss Stahl's effortless acting of Maggie Pepper revealed an insight into human nature that is not often seen in the creations of the drama. She was a plain young woman, light and frivolous in conversation, but capable of expressing emotion that was felt far beyond the edge of the footlights.

The Maggie that was held to view at the Park last evening demanded your attention—and got it. You laughed with her—not at her—and you could not escape the pathetic note she sounded when things began to go wrong and it looked like a new girl for the job. Miss Stahl made every point count—she started you away on a smile and then brought you back to a bitter realization of the little tragedies that put a deep shadow in Maggie's life.

Miss Stahl played with her audience. She chased it from one emotion to another, but there was no trickery to her art—it was as genuine as the money you paid at the box office.

Mr. Klein, who has done some effective dramatic mack-raking in his time, made it clear that the department store is not without its temptations. He dwelt but briefly upon sordid topics, however. But he did grow dreadfully melodramatic toward the end by introducing characters that were plucked boldly from the conventional ten, twenty and thirty drama, now deceased.

Other Familiar Types.

While Miss Stahl, by the force and conviction of intelligent acting, made Maggie Pepper a young woman worth knowing, there were other familiar and distinctive types moving about in the play. The Jake Rothschild of Max Reynolds might have stepped right out of a skirt factory, and Agnes Mare was a fresh shop girl after your own heart. John R. Robertson fitted nicely into the handsome role of the young merchant, and Walter Craven made the store manager bad enough to suit anyone with a taste for sour things.

It was plain that "Maggie Pepper" was made to order for Miss Stahl, and she seized it as her own at the start. It was not only her sense of subtle comedy that made the play effective, however, but also her unusual fidelity of making the best of any situation, and her astonishing power of expression. She knows how to read common-place lines and make them real.

Maggie Pepper is a smart girl and she will surely thrive and prosper at the Park.

Gaiety Theatre.

"The Gay Masqueraders" drew two big audiences to the Gaiety Theatre yesterday. This proved one of the brightest burlesque entertainments that has ever visited the house, and made good with its audiences on genuine musical comedy merit. Besides a score of pretty girls, who naturally added to the gaiety of the performance, there were several comedians who kept themselves busy. The song numbers were attractive and the costuming far above the average burlesque. "The Masqueraders" are sure of a week's prosperous business.

Shows That Remain.

"The Million" continues at the Majestic, where it supplies many laughs for its audiences.

"Over Night" remains at the Shubert. It is a rollicking farce concerning honeymooners.

The Dorbar pictures began a new week at Tremont Temple last evening.

"The Count of Luxembourg" began its second week at the Tremont Theatre last evening.

The new company at the St. James Theatre began its first full week in "The New York Idea," last evening.

Violet Mascotte's "Musical Maids" continue at the Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Howard Atheneum.

James J. Corbett was the star of the new bill at the Old Howard yesterday. The burlesque attraction was "Stars of Stageland."

Paragon Park.

The final week of the cabaret show in the Palm Garden at Paragon Park began last evening.

May Robson Brings Laughter at Hollis in "A Night Out"

There was a woman in the audience at the Hollis Street Theatre last evening who laughed till she cried.

The occasion was the return home of grandma after her night out with the boys.

Her switch—beg pardon—her puffs were gone, and without going into any further details which might be disputed by the ladies, she was a wreck.

"Grannums" in this instance is Miss May Robson, who moved from the Park to the Hollis to open the season at that theatre.

"A Night Out" is described as a "long lingering laugh." It is. Imagine a splendid old lady making amorous approaches to a decorated professor in order to test his affection for her scaldy, widowed daughter, doing it so charmingly, so feebly, as to win his attentions, and to her daughter's utter astonishment, a promise of marriage. If you can picture this same dear, understanding old lady in the tiny, wee hours of early morning, half plunging, pulling and twisting herself over the rail of a second-story porch-veranda and falling into a chair nearly exhausted from her night out, then you may have some idea of May Robson in her newest role.

Boston Theatre.

"The Greyhound" began its local engagement at the Boston Theatre yesterday. It will be reviewed in Wednesday's AMERICAN.

Colonial Theatre.

"The Quaker Girl" arrived at the Colonial Theatre yesterday. It will be reviewed in Thursday's AMERICAN.

BILL AT KEITH'S WINS APPLAUSE

At B. F. Keith's Theatre Louis A. Simon and Kathryn Osterman, with a large company, top a bill without a weak spot in a miniature musical comedy, "A Persian Garden." Mr. Simon is laughable as usual in his familiar impersonation of a hapless valet, to whose lot fall many tasks unpleasant to him, but extremely amusing to the spectators. Miss Osterman is refreshing as a former chorus girl, whose old-time sweethearts cause her many tribulations. Miss Helen May sings effectively, and so does Louis La Vale. The piece is prettily staged.

Madame Olga Petrova, of striking good looks, entertains with several songs, and a little tragic acting. She was exceptionally well received yesterday afternoon, as she deserved. Horace Newman, Harry Pearwick, Richard F. Sullivan and Miss Helaine Hadley present a travesty on the familiar rural play called "Why Sciatica Stayed at Home." Their humor won them much laughter and applause.

Robinson Newbold and Marie Louise Gribben give some excellent songs and imitations. Lamberti, who plays the piano, cello and violin, presents his elaborate impersonations of famous musicians. A dramatic passage from "Trilby," in which he portrays the death of Svengali, is particularly well done. Correlli and Gillette have an acrobatic turn much out of the usual, and Marie and Billy Hart are sure laughter-provokers with their novelty, "The Circus Girl." The Reid Sisters dance pleasantly.

Bass Point.

The Bass Point and Nahant boats had record-breaking passenger lists on every trip yesterday.

Norumbega Park.

"The Missing Miss" was the somewhat alluring title of the new musical comedy in the open air theatre at Norumbega Park yesterday. The holiday brought out two big audiences.

MAN FROM HOME DELIGHTS AGAIN

William Hodge has found himself in happy surroundings again. "The Man From Home," which established a new record for long runs at the Park Theatre three seasons ago, is now comfortably housed at the Plymouth Theatre, where it began its first full week yesterday. No distinctly American play has ever made a more agreeable impression on playgoers, and it was natural that the holiday should yield two large audiences. Mr. Hodge is the same quaint Indiana lawyer that has amused and delighted theatre goers for five years in this play, and while the long visit of three seasons ago made him well acquainted with those who follow the theatre there was evidence yesterday that he is still popular in the role.

"The Man From Home" deals with many types of people—good and bad—and they are all interesting. In beginning his sixth year with the play Mr. Hodge is surrounded with a company of excellent players, which, with but four exceptions, is the same that was with him when the play was last seen in Boston.

The wholesome atmosphere of "The Man From Home" has made it, in many respects, the most successful play of a generation.

Globe Theatre

Although the Globe has been open all Summer the regular Winter season began yesterday with a program of United vaudeville. The Six Kelsereann Girls head the list and a more sprightly gathering of young artists could not be imagined. The Mozarts, with a pretty scenic act and snow-shoe dancing won great favor; Edeny Brothers and Company had a novel singing and talking number; the Three Society Girls scored in an unusual act; Lockhart and Leddy were a pair of eccentric dancers and Chester Kingston amazed his audience with a conjuring act. The Rays, the song review, the Pathe Weekly and many other picture plays were on the program.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—Arrangements have been made by Miss Rose Pitonof, the young Boston swimmer, to start her cross-Channel swim tonight. She will be accompanied by the Dover tug Princess May.

Wolff, one of the most formidable of masculine competitors, will start about the same time.

Waldron's Casino.

"The Winning Widow" was the new attraction at Waldron's Casino Theatre yesterday. It was a typical burlesque entertainment.

Grand Opera House.

"The Moulin Rouge" burlesquers, with a score of lively girls, moved into the Grand Opera House yesterday for a week's stay.

NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST RETAIL STORE

Jordan Marsh Company Now Occupies the Enormous Floor Space of 24 Acres. A Store That Is Renowned the World Over for the Vast Extent of Its Business and Its Reputation for Absolute Reliability and Good Service.

An Insight Into the Inner-Workings of the Big Store Whose Progress During the Past 61 Years Is a Notable Achievement.

The growth in floor space of from 4000 square feet in 1851 to 1,100,000 square feet in 1912 shows the progress that has established Jordan Marsh Company as New England's foremost store. Twenty-four acres of floor space—half as large as the Boston Common and nearly as large as the whole Public Garden—that is the area it takes Jordan Marsh Company for its business in order to satisfy the demands made upon it by the New England people. It is a store that justly earns its title of "The Mercantile Heart of New England." The largest trade enjoyed by any retail store in New England, exceeded by only one of two stores in the whole United States, centres in their two buildings.

Founded in 1851.

Eben D. Jordan, a poor farmer boy from Danville, Me., came to Boston and secured a position as errand boy in a store. In 1841, with comparatively small capital, he established a little one-room dry goods store on Hanover street.

A few years later, in 1851, the firm of Jordan & Marsh was formed as a jobbing dry goods' business at 129 Milk street, and this was the nucleus of the present Jordan Marsh Company. The first ten years were devoted entirely to the jobbing and wholesaling of dry goods. In 1861 a retail branch was established on Washington street, near Avon street, the site of the present Retail Store. In 1894 the retail branch of the business had reached such proportions that the jobbing trade was discontinued. During the time additional buildings had been taken on Washington and Avon streets, making practically what is now the Main Store.

New Buildings.

The business in house furnishings had been growing so rapidly that extra room for this business was an imperative need. So what was then termed the Annex and is now called the Furniture Building, the eight-story structure adjoining the present New Building, was erected on Avon, Chauncy and Bedford sts. In 1900 the present mammoth New Building of nine stories and two basements was begun and the year 1911 saw its completion. At this time also the Main Store was entirely remodeled, and the moving of many sections into the New Building made it possible in the Main Store to provide broad aisles and greatly increased space for the different departments, resulting in the present roomy appearance of the store.

The Basement Store.

One of the most phenomenal successes in the retail commercial world of New England is the record of the Jordan Marsh Company Basement Store. It was established in March, 1910, and though now only about 2½ years old, it has developed such an enormous business that it is the talk of the trade. If ever a store with a store for the sale of the less expensive lines of goods, and in addition to numerous bargain lots offered weekly by every Basement department it carries a regular line of popular-priced goods.

Store Fixtures.

The counters and fixtures throughout the establishment are of mahogany, all being made to order for the various sections in which they are placed. These are augmented by numerous large display cases, electrically lighted, and the latest improved methods for displaying the different kinds of merchandise. This affords customers the utmost degree of convenience and opportunity for careful selection and adds greatly to the store's general air of refinement. The appearance of all the floors is made more rich by the use of more than 40,000 yards of beautiful green Wilton carpet.

Location of Merchandise.

To facilitate shopping, all the dry goods, dress accessories and apparel for men, women and children are assembled in the Main Store, while all the house furnishings and fancy goods are located in the New Building.

Street Floor, Main Store.

Here are found Women's Neckwear, Veils, Umbrellas, Ribbons, Women's Gloves, Handkerchiefs, Laces, Trimmings, Braids, Buttons, Smallwares, Belts, Paper Patterns, Linings, Wash Goods, Dress Goods and Silks.

Separate Men's Store.

Also on the Street Floor, reached directly from the Summer Street Entrance, is the Men's Store, entirely separate from the departments selling other goods. The latest ideas from London and America will be found in a critical display of Men's Shirts, Gloves, Furnishings, Hosiery, Underwear, Shoes, Hats, Clothing and Automobile Apparel.

Second Floor, Main Store.

Women's Outer Apparel of the best grade is seen here, and Eight Buyers from this floor alone have been in Europe during the past Summer preparing for the finest showing of fashionable garments to be seen in New England. This includes Women's Coats, Suits, Costumes, Furs, Separate Skirts, Waists and Trimmed and Untrimmed Millinery.

The Juvenile Floor.

On the Third Floor, Main Store, will be found everything in Boys', Misses', Girls' and Infants' Wear, all conveniently grouped together on this one floor, with a large separate section devoted to each branch. This saves parents the trouble of traveling from one floor to another when selecting their children's outfits, as in the usual case. In the large and beautiful sections of House Dresses, Kimonos, Neglige, Art Embroidery and Women's Shoes are also seen on this floor.

Fourth Floor, Main Store.

This is aptly termed the "Great White Floor," for here are stocks of Domestic and French Underwear, Corsets, Women's Knit Underwear, Hosiery, Sweaters, together with great counters and cases full of Whitewear Goods, Embroideries, Bed Clothing, Flannels and Gowns. Also a complete showing of this kind of merchandise.

Street Floor, New Building.

Here are beautiful assortments of the latest ideas in Leather Goods, Cutlery, Optical Goods, Stationery, Toilet Goods, Fancy Leather Goods, Luggage, Clocks and Bronzes.

Second Floor, New Building.

The "Largest Salesroom of Its Kind in the World" occupies the entire Second Floor with assembled effects of Kitchen Utensils, Hardware, Bathroom Supplies, Electric and Brass Goods. The floor is bright and airy, contrary to the usual custom of keeping such goods in the basement.

Third Floor, New Building.

The "All the Year 'Round Toy Store," the only one of any size in Boston, including the unique Doll Parlor, as well as Music, Sporting Goods and Trunks, occupies the Third Floor.

Fourth Floor, New Building.

A brilliant gathering of handsome China, Cut Glass, Lamps and Pictures is situated here in one of the finest settings seen anywhere in the country. Such stocks of these goods as are shown in these sections is a revelation to New England.

Fifth Floor, New Building.

Of this floor a Boston man recently remarked, "I have traveled all over the world and never have I seen a better stock of Oriental Rugs, Domestic Rugs, Carpets, Mattings and Linoleums than I saw today on the Fifth Floor of the Jordan Marsh Company." Incidentally, the company does an enormous business in this line.

Sixth Floor, New Building.

Wonderful assortments of Imported and Domestic Lace Curtains and a complete line of beautiful Upholsteries are open for inspection on this floor. Here also is the office of Interior Decorating.

Furniture Building.

Eight entire floors and two overflow floors in the New Building are required to display the stock of high grade Furniture. A special feature is made of Period Furnitures, and the August and Mahogany Furniture Rooms are well known to the New England public.

Furnished Suite of Rooms.

Many a newly married couple have been enabled to furnish a home in a stylish manner from the ideas they have gained in a journey through the furnished suite of rooms in this store. It consists of several rooms, each carrying out some particular scheme of decoration. These rooms are refurnished entirely in the Spring and in the Fall of each year. Thousands of people have gained many valuable ideas in passing through these rooms each season.

Interior Decorating.

A corps of men, who have had long experience in planning the best decorations for, form a contract or interior decorating force. These experts give the needs of their knowledge in furnishing homes harmoniously, free of all charge. The decorations in some of the most notably beautiful mansions and public buildings in New England have resulted from the ideas put forth by the men in this department.

Section of Antiquities.

This is one of the most interesting spots in the big establishment. From all parts of this country and little, out-of-the-way villages in England, France, Britany, Holland and Scotland have been gathered a large collection of antiques and objects of virtu, which are here shown. Their own representatives have spent considerable time during the past two years in making this collection, which is now at its best, though many of the finer pieces have found their way to the homes of collectors. There are many quaint bits of tapestries, candlesticks, furniture, armor, weapons, china and glass and the remarkable spinning wheels, pictures, silver, copper and gold, as well as hundreds of other articles that one could well spend half a day in looking them over and much longer time in tracing their ancestry.

Additional Sections.

In many parts of both buildings are situated workrooms of different kinds, enclosed rooms, receiving rooms and stock rooms.

Cold Storage and Fur Manufacturing.

On the second floor of the Main Store is the Office of Cold Storage, which receives a liberal patronage from the customers who desire to safely store away their furs, rugs, woolen clothing, etc., at a minimum charge. These goods are given on separate pegs or placed in special bins and cold, dry air is kept circulating through them at a correct temperature.

A large assortment of skins and trimmings are kept on hand and custom fur manufacturing is carried on to a large extent. The store does an immense business in fur repairing. All the latest machinery for this purpose is employed, and is operated by expert workmen who have been with this house for years.

Delivery System.

Practically every section has an individual handle, and each basket, a system that obviates the delay otherwise necessary in delivering parcels and change. In the sub-basement of the new building is a modern shipping room that is a model of which many department stores have based their improvements. All parcels, with the exception of heavy house furnishings, drop down spiral chutes to moving belts which carry them to a central station. There the different bundles are sorted out, and other moving belts carry them to the proper table or bin from which the drivers take them to their wagons. An all night delivery service is also utilized which, all in all, gives patrons the best delivery service of any store in the city.

Storehouse and Stables.

There is a large storehouse situated in South Boston that contains 120,000 square feet of floor space. The stable is a large five-story structure on Harrison Avenue, where are kept the horses, delivery wagons and auto trucks.

The Store at Night.

A dozen or so night watchmen keep constant vigil on the property at night, each making his rounds and investigating at each of the different stations. A small army of cleaners are employed at washing the floors, carrying away the rubbish and cleaning the carpets with vacuum cleaners, the power for which is furnished by a special engine in the sub-basement. When the store opens in the morning everything is spick and span and the remarkable cleanliness of this store has often been remarked upon.

Scope of Merchandise.

Being the largest retail store in New England, Jordan Marsh Company must be the largest individual buyer of merchandise. While it is the company's policy to purchase from American manufacturers wherever possible, yet it is a well-known and admitted fact that the Europeans excel in many of the finer grades of merchandise, and in order to give the New England public the finest assortments from which to select, the house sends about eight buyers to Europe yearly—some twice a year—to obtain the choicest goods from the foreign fashion centres. This is a greater number of buyers than are sent abroad by all the other New England stores combined and more than are sent by any one store in the country. New England should be proud of this record of striving to give the finest merchandise to its customers.

Quality of Merchandise.

The quality of Jordan Marsh Company goods has been a household word in New England for over 60 years. One has only thousands of times from the lips of different people "I go to Jordan Marsh Company to trade because it is a reliable store, and if any purchase is not satisfactory they make it right without a lot of quibbling." They not only guarantee to give complete satisfaction with every purchase, but probably every reader of this article knows from experience that they back up their guarantee.

Consideration of Customers.

In this store the customer is boss. That fact is driven into every salesperson from the beginning of his or her employment. This is the home of the famous "Jordan Marsh Spirit," which means that it is a serious offense for any salesperson to let a customer go out dissatisfied. Every customer is treated as a guest, and if at any time any information about the store is desired, any salesperson will pleasantly and politely comply with the request. It is a safe statement to make that in no other store in the whole United States does such an easy, homelike atmosphere prevail as in this establishment.

Value to the Community.

The up-to-date department store assembles in one convenient arrangement goods from all parts of the world. Purchases are made in such quantities that a low purchase price is secured. Department stores of the Jordan Marsh standard, combined with more than are sent by any one store in the country. New England should be proud of this record of striving to give the finest merchandise to its customers.

Public Accommodations.

Every practicable method of making the shopping tour more pleasant to the customer is utilized in this great store. The comfort and well-being of everybody who enters the store is safe-guarded to the fullest extent. It is really the "downtown house" of the Boston shopping public.

Transfers or Till Books.

When a customer has more than one purchase to make during a shopping trip to the store she may procure a "Till Book" from any floor superintendent. All her purchases are entered in this book, and when the shopping journey is finished the different bundles are waiting for her all together when she pays the bill at the Transfer Desk.

Postoffice.

A regular sub-station of the Boston Postoffice is situated on the Street Floor of the Main Store. Here one may purchase stamps in any quantity or denomination, postal cards and "stamped envelopes, may register letters or buy special delivery privileges. Carrier collections are made every hour.

Telephone System.

The store's eight station branch exchange is the largest in Boston. For the customers' convenience there are 30 pay stations scattered throughout the two buildings. There are also 145 connections to the different departments and 45 trunk lines running into the store. Oxford 3200 is never "line busy," and can be called day or night.

Telegraph Station.

At the foot of the Main Stairway on the Street Floor of the Main Store is the branch office of the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company. Here messages can be sent to all parts of the world and regular messenger boy service can be had if desired.

Women's Parlors.

Beautiful, spacious and elegantly appointed parlors of rest rooms are situated on the Fourth Floor, Main Store, and the Seventh Floor, New Building. Here the writing materials, daily newspapers, periodicals, checkroom, lavatories and every necessary convenience for customers. They are a popular meeting place for the ladies of Boston and vicinity.

Sick Rooms.

One of the special features of the store is the well-equipped sick rooms on the Fourth Floor, Main Store, and the Seventh Floor, New Building, adjoining the women's parlors. Here customers who may be taken suddenly ill can in complete privacy receive the care of a trained nurse with hospital experience, and medical attendance may be secured in a few minutes.

Mail Order Service.

Customers who send mail orders to the house may be assured that their order receives personal attention of one of the experienced "shoppers," a person of taste and good judgment, who selects the goods ordered. This personal service is taken advantage of by thousands of customers when away from the city.

Lost and Found Articles.

All articles lost by customers in the store which are found by employes are sent to the Lost and Found Office, which is located in the Basement, Main Store. Articles to the value of many thousands of dollars have been found and returned to their owners, a fact that speaks well for the honesty of the employes of the store.

Bureau of Adjustment.

As is natural with any business, there are always some little delays or mistakes to rectify in the transactions with customers. The Bureau of Adjustment, located in the Basement, Main Store, takes care of any complaints and arranges matters in a satisfactory manner to expeditious manner.

Ecclesiastical Bureau.

On the second floor, Main Store, is an office for the reception of clergymen and representatives of religious institutions. Competent attendants are ready to give their experienced advice regarding the selection and delivery of different articles.

Carriage Entrance.

At the corner of Washington and Avon sts is the carriage entrance, with a groom always in attendance. This service is much appreciated by customers who visit the store in carriages or automobiles.

Elevators.

There are in the store 26 passenger elevators of the largest improved safety type, which handle even the largest holiday crowds in an expeditious and satisfactory manner.

The Store and Its Employes.

The army of employes of Jordan Marsh Company forms one of the largest bodies of its kind in the country. They are all carefully chosen and trained in the system peculiar to that organization. Each individual is considered one of the store family and is given opportunity to obtain knowledge and experience in any branch the house supplying the ideas and teaching every minute detail of the business. The constant growth of the capacity of each individual and the efficiency of the organization as a whole show strikingly the effects of this plan.

Salesmanship School.

Every employe before beginning actual work in the store takes a course in the Salesmanship School under competent teachers. There are also advanced classes for employes with lectures by different authorities on various features of department store work. A well-trained force, drilled to wait upon customers in a polite and efficient manner, is one of the great assets enjoyed by this house, and one much appreciated by its customers.

Policy of Advancement.

It has been the policy of this concern ever since its foundation to fill positions of trust and responsibility from those who have grown up in the store and have been advanced from the ranks. Such a prospect promotes ambition among the employes, who can clearly see that by their strict attention to business and by learning all that can be learned about their particular section that promotion is sure as well as a big reward. It is understood that practically all of the buyers and other executive heads of the store have grown up in the business in this store from boy and girl. This also applies to nearly all of the members of the firm who have passed through all stages from office boy to partner. Every time is no better career for a young man that could be mapped out than to have him start in one of the lower positions in this great store and gradually work out his own future.

Suggestions by Employes.

A prize of $1.00 is awarded to every employe who makes a suggestion for the betterment of the store service that is adopted by the firm. The unsalted bundle boy is as sure of an audience with the officers as is one of the executives. Keeping in such close touch with the employes enables this house to make many improvements for their customers' benefit.

Comforts for Employes.

Spacious and hygienic dining rooms are provided for the employes, where wholesome food, cooked in the store's own kitchens, may be obtained at cost. There is also a comfortable reading room, with a library containing 5,000 volumes. In addition there are two sick rooms, one in each building, with the constant attendance of a trained nurse in each and free consultation by a noted physician each morning.

Mutual Aid Association.

The store is a co-operative insurance company, composed of and governed by employes only, with sickness and death benefits. In the seven years of its existence more than $40,000 has been paid out in benefits by this association.

Field Days and Dances.

Every year the employes hold family outings and dances, the funds from which go to help the especially needy cases brought before the board of government of the Mutual Aid Association. These social affairs help greatly to weld the employes together into one happy family.

Store Topics.

This is the name given to a small magazine issued by the employes each month. Its contents include personal experiences, plans for betterment of the store service and other beneficial matter. It is very popular with the employes and looks anxiously await the publication every 30 days.

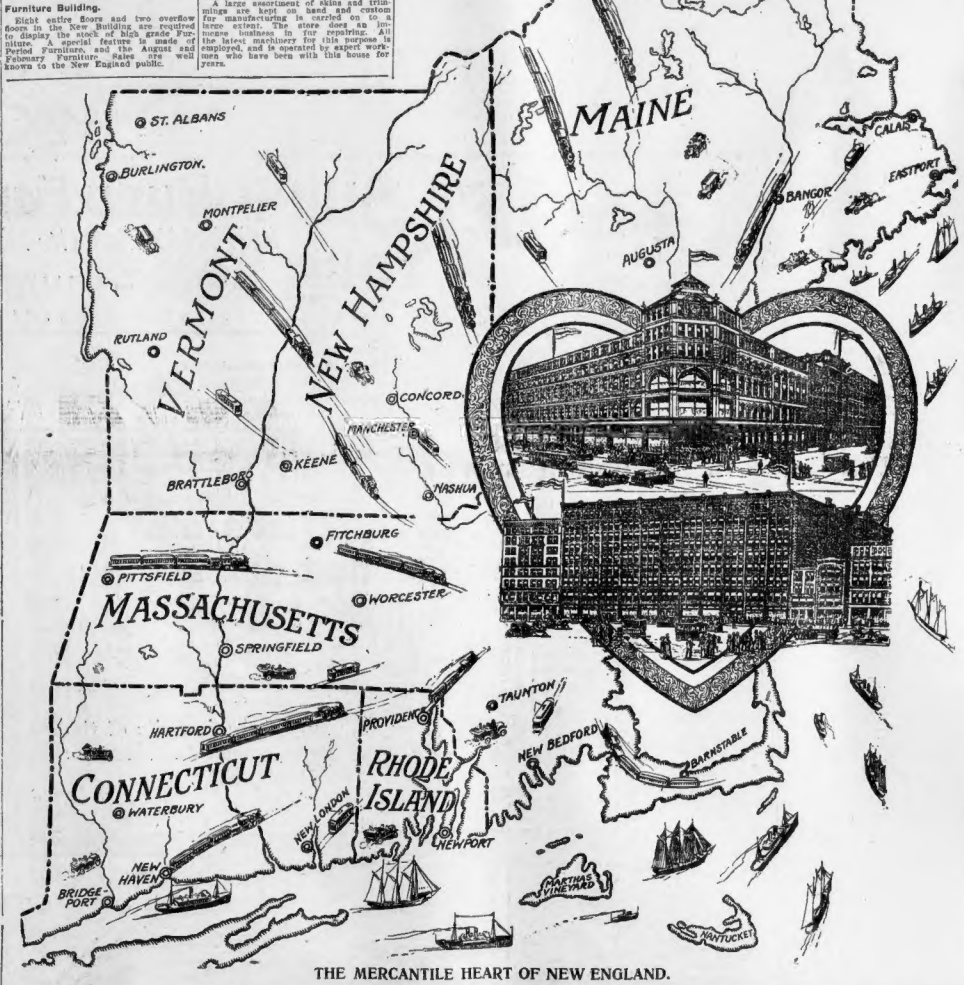
Gifts to Employes.

During the Christmas season, this house remembers its employes with gifts, believed there at that time, a gift of money. To the number of 2,000 or more, the total cost of their sales from December 1 to 24, inclusive, is those who are employed in selling substantial gifts are made according to the amount of their sales.

During the holiday season this store is open evenings, and the employes are thus relieved from evening service. The action of the house in this particular is much appreciated by employes. Each employe, who has completed a year's service, receives a gift of money, which is given a vacation of two weeks each year. In addition, every the smaller boys and girls being included.

Conclusion.

The term "Representative Retail Store of New England"—founded, carried on and managed by New England people and built by New England capital. Each year of the 61 years of its existence has seen an increase in business. No store in the whole world has a better reputation for reliability. No store has played more fairly with its customers. Boston and New England should be proud of its success, for it not only leads New England, but is numbered among the half-dozen great stores of the entire world. Those who have traveled extensively know that, go where one will, at home or abroad, the one store that everybody recognizes as the typical representative of Boston stores is that of Jordan Marsh Company.



THE MERCANTILE HEART OF NEW ENGLAND.

TERROR STRIKES OIL KING'S HOME

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—The lives of John D. Rockefeller, his son and his grandchildren, have been threatened, as well as the destruction of his $2,000,000 mansion at Pocantico Hills, it was learned today, by blackmailing members of the so-called Black Hand gang that has brought terror to many throughout the country.

This is the secret of the alarm at the Rockefeller home and the place swarms with armed guards ready to shoot an invader who intends harm to any of the Rockefeller family or employes.

Eighteen armed negroes, carrying repeating rifles and revolvers, accompanied by five savage Great Dane dogs, six Burns detectives under Detective A. J. Boyd and three under sheriffs commanded by Deputy Noonier of Westchester County, are on guard at the big estate.

While the elder Rockefeller is not there, being at his home in Cleveland, his son and grandchildren are, and it is the threats against them that has caused the greatest fear.

In addition to these forces there is employed on the place an army of 500 Italians who are also armed for the purpose of protecting the Rockefeller family and the property.

These employes have been subject to attack and to blackmail for years. Some of them have been the victims of assassination. It was not until the threats were made directly against the lives of the Rockefellers that such an armed resistance was provided.

The blackmailers have demanded heavy tribute if their communications are ignored or the authorities called in to trail and arrest them.

They have threatened murder and kidnapping against the persons of the oil king and his son, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and the latter's two youngest children, who are now ill from measles at the Kent House, a sort of nursery on the grounds not far from their father's residence.

They have further threatened murder against Frederick A. Briggs, the superintendent of the estate, and a big negro fireman named Dunson, who boosts the teamsters and others.

JAMES HANLEY'S FUNERAL TOMORROW

Services to Be Held at Church of the Holy Name, Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 3.—The funeral of James Hanley, who died on Saturday night, is to be held Wednesday morning with services at 10 o'clock at the Church of the Holy Name, Jenkins and Knowles streets, Providence. The interment will be at St. Francis Cemetery. The news of Mr. Hanley's death through an apoplectic stroke came as a shock to his many friends yesterday. Born in Ireland, Mr. Hanley came to Providence with his parents at the age of five years. His opportunities for schooling were meagre, and he was compelled to seek work at an early age. At eighteen he started in business for himself, and due to his integrity and sound judgment he quickly laid the foundation of his future success. He early saw the possibilities of the brewing business and organized the James Hanley Brewery Company of Providence, and subsequently the Providence Brewing Company and the Hanley-Hoye Company, both of Providence. He was a large owner of real estate, upon which he erected large commercial and manufacturing buildings. In all his enterprises he depended upon his own judgment and financial accumulations, rarely using borrowed money.

The secret of his success was a combination of industry, clear business judgment and fairness and justice towards those with whom he dealt. He was particularly ambitious of maintaining his properties and plants in the highest state of efficiency.

He was reluctant to attract attention, and although frequently asked to accept official positions in financial institutions he persistently refused, until in later life he accepted a position upon the committee to reorganize the Union Trust Company of Providence, and upon the sale of the stock owned by that company in the National Exchange Bank he became one of its largest stockholders and a director, which position he held at the time of his death.

He was for a number of years Rhode Island Trustee of the New England Brewers' Asso. and President of the R. I. Brewers' Asso.

Mr. Hanley had a great love for horses, and during his career was the owner of the finest and fastest driving horses in Rhode Island, which he drove with much skill.

Although never inattentive to the demands of his business, Mr. Hanley's social side was attractive, and to his intimates he had a charm of wit and conversation which displayed alertness of mind, careful reading and keen observation. He had a staunch and sympathetic loyalty to his friends, but his generous acts were accompanied with no ostentation.

Five children, three daughters and two sons, survive Mr. Hanley; Mrs. George C. Dempsey of Lowell, Mass., Mrs. John W. McAuliffe, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Miss Clara Hanley, Walter H. Hanley and Gerald T. Hanley, Providence.

FEAR BATTLE OF MINERS AND MILITIA

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Sept. 3.—The striking miners and the mine guards on Paint Creek have been exchanging shots intermittently today, and it is feared before night there will be a pitched battle. Ten miners are reported injured. The situation is regarded as far more serious than at any time since the militia was called to quell the disturbances. It is reported the miners have planned to swoop down upon the mine guards and annihilate them. Four additional companies of military arrived today. Five thousand miners are armed with Winchesters.

WORST STOMACH TROUBLE ENDED

No Indigestion, Gas, Heartburn or Dyspepsia Five Minutes After Taking "Pape's Diapepsin."

Every year regularly more than a million stomach sufferers in the United States, England and Canada take Pape's Diapepsin, and realize not only immediate, but lasting relief.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, gassy or out-of-order stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Get from your pharmacist a fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, nausea, debilitating headaches, dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is waiting for you at any drug store.

These large fifty-cent cases contain more than sufficient to thoroughly cure almost any case of dyspepsia, indigestion or any other stomach disorder.

TWO DEAD IN HULK OF THE NANTUCKET

BALTIMORE, Sept. 3.—Two sailors are dead in the blackened hulk of the $450,000 Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company steamer, Nantucket, that turned turtle and sank off Locust Point after fire had reduced her to a mere shell. They are James Rotten and John Krantz. Rotton was connected with the ship. He had been ashore and raced back into the blazing craft to get some money he had left in his stateroom. He went down with the craft in her death plunge. John Krantz was killed by a fall down a hatchway.

WHAT WILL CURE MY BACK?

Common sense will do more to cure backache than anything else. 'Twill tell you whether the kidneys are sore, swollen and aching. It will tell you in that case that there is no use trying to cure it with a plaster. If the passages are scant or too frequent, proof that there is kidney trouble is complete. Then common sense will tell you to use Doan's Kidney Pills, the best recommended special kidney remedy.

A BOSTON MAN SAYS—

"I was in misery from kidney complaint," says H. H. Roberts of 744 E. Fourth St., South Boston, Mass. "The kidney secretions pained me terribly in passage. Doan's Kidney Pills went directly to the root of my trouble, curing me. I recommend them highly."

CUMMINS OUT FOR ROOSEVELT

DES MOINES, Ia., Sept. 3.—U. S. Senator Cummins came out flatly against President Taft in a statement he issued here today. The Senator declared he would vote for Colonel Roosevelt for President, but at the same time announced his opposition to the naming of a third party State ticket at the convention which Roosevelt is scheduled to address tomorrow.

Mr. Cummins said: "The renomination of Taft was opposed by a overwhelming majority of the Republicans throughout the country. A meagre minority succeeded in renominating him and it is vital to inquire how it was accomplished.

"First, his friends controlled the national committee.

"Second, we have had for years a false, vicious basis of representation in the national convention through which Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia, States that cast altogether in 1908 870,631 Republican votes, had 204 delegates in the convention.

DR. DYER, NEW SCHOOL HEAD, TAKES UP DUTIES

"I'm a Bostonian Already," He Says, as He Starts Work.

F. B. DYER, NEW SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

F. B. Dyer, Boston's new $10,000 Superintendent of Schools, is here and he's a Bostonian already. He believes the Boston school system is the best in the country. He started work in earnest today, going to his office as soon as he had finished breakfast at the Adams House. Mr. Dyer is enthusiastic over the prospects in Boston. He hopes to work out the ideas that have been started here rather than bring in startling innovations.

I am a Bostonian. I am here and have burned my bridges behind me. From now on, as long as I remain head of the Boston schools, I am going to work for the good of Boston and give the city the best that is in me.

I think the school system here is the best in the country. It goes far ahead of what we had in Cincinnati. I shall work from within and not from without. That is, I shall not undertake to introduce any spectacular methods. The system here is a very good one, and I shall take it up as I have found it.

It does not do for a man to come from outside and introduce new methods all at once. I think he should study the system as he finds it and improve it. That is what I intend to do.

I have been studying the situation in Boston ever since I accepted the position as Superintendent of Schools. I find it is one that has no equal in the country.

FRESNO DAN SENDS WORD HE'LL BE BACK IN TIME FOR HEARING

The mystery surrounding the whereabouts of "Fresno Dan," accepted by the Russell estate as the missing heir, Daniel Blake Russell, is at an end. He is in Minneapolis and is coming back, today's reports declare, for the continuation of the identity hearing this month.

In a telegram he says:

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 2.

I see there is a rumor that I have left Boston for good. Such is not the case, as I will surely be back by the 16th.

DANIEL BLAKE RUSSELL.

Since Fresno dropped out of sight there has been much conjecture as to where he had gone. Ferdinand B. Almy, executor of the Russell estate, has insisted that he was not twenty-four hours away from Boston. Dakota Dan has laughed about his rival's disappearance and confidently expressed the opinion that he would not be seen again. William R. Scharton, Dakota Dan's counsel, has had nothing more to say than that one Dan is enough for him to look after.

You can be registered at the office of the election commissioners any time up to September 14 and outside registration will be held in the wards beginning on next Monday and lasting for ten days.

Notes of the Political Campaign

Every person who signed the nomination papers of Sheriff John Quinn has received a postal card expressing "Honest John's" deep sense of gratitude for their kindness. Nothing like remembering your friends," says Quinn.

It will be Representative John Anderson of Ward 20 after January 1, if his friends in Dorchester have their say. John is a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the House in the coming primaries. He is a newspaper man by profession.

Former Congressman Michael J. Merrick is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the House in Ward 17. In the event of his nomination and election he will call the House to order on the opening day by reason of seniority of membership, having served several terms a number of years ago.

Goddie Island is sizzling with politics. The candidates for the Democratic and Republican nomination for the House in Wards 1 and 2 are leaving no stone unturned in getting to the ears of voters on "real" issues.

Although some of the candidates for office in various sections of the city are opposed to the high cost of living and running on that platform still many of them may be seen in various hotel restaurants eating porterhouse steaks and smoking high-priced perfectos.

Representative Edward Emmet McGrath of Ward 13, a candidate for renomination on the Democratic ticket, keeps a scrapbook of clippings from newspapers and magazines. McGrath says it has contributed a great deal to his knowledge of men and events.

Speaker Champ Clark received an ovation at the dinner given by Humphrey O'Sullivan of Lowell and Paul Hannigan of Lawrence at Canobie Lake, N. H. It showed the high esteem in which Speaker Clark is held by the Democrats of this State.

John J. O'Hare, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for the Senate in the district comprising Wards 18, 19 and 22, made a good run for the honor last year. He expects to do better this year.

FREE SEATS TO ALL BALL GAMES

Here is a tip to the baseball "fans"! Save the coupons now being distributed with the AMERICAN by the newsboys and newsdealers. They mean a lot to you this week.

The Washington Senators, the surprise of the 1912 American League race, will battle the Red Sox at the Fenway Park this week. Without doubt the seats will be overflowed. The only safe way to see the series from a grandstand seat is by saving the coupons given with the AMERICAN each day.

One hundred numbers are printed on the sport pages every day—fifty in the morning editions and fifty in the afternoon editions. If you get a coupon with a number corresponding to one of these printed, it entitles you to a free grandstand seat. Bring the winning coupon to the AMERICAN Promotion Department, No. 5 Winthrop square.

Also keep in mind that the coupons are valueless unless a big red cross appears across the front of them.

EASY VICTORY FOR HAPPY STARS, 14—0

The Happy Stars enjoyed a little field day at Revere yesterday afternoon and incidentally walloped the Columbia Spa baseball team by the score of 14 to 0. The men led by the kinks of the newsboys had things all their own way throughout the game. Johnny Archdeacon, the former High School of Commerce player, did the honors on the mound for the winners, and struck out ten batters and allowed but two scattered hits.

RED SOX RILEY'S COLUMN PILGRIMS

AS CAVIAR is to canvasback, so is New York to Washington. (This being Boston, it might be more proper to say "As caviar ARE to canvasback.") But this, being also a sporting column, it is advisable not to stray too far away from the "American" language, and also to translate the above into the remark that the Red Sox yesterday made an appetiser of the ball team that play s on the hilltops of the village of New York before proceeding to turn cannibal and devour the esteemed Senators from the flowery and verbose town of Washington later this week. In fact, returning to the simile, it mig ht be better to say that the appetizer was in liquid form, since New York—or its two chief quarter sections—is canned after cocktails.

THIS little diversion in New York, the scores of which were 2 to 1 and 1 to 0, respectively, was also a horn d'oeuvre to today's festivities, when the athletic young men from Boston, who are now at the head of the American League, will take another bite of the cherry—discussing Manhattan again—this afternoon. Thus far the leading Bostonians have beaten the trailing New Yorkers six-teen games out of seventeen and, but for the great good fortune of Hugh Bedient in having become a happy bridegroom at an unhappy time for Boston, they would likely now stand 17 to 0, with one more game to follow today. But who cares to be a hog? That's a Chicago product, and we may have to talk business with the Cubs later.

LET'S stick to our own beats. They were nearly done Saturday when we gave the Athletics a final trouncing and sent them south subdued, while the pestiferous Senators were humbled before the same Yankees whom we disposed of yester-day. After the smoke had cleared away and we counted up, we found ourselves eleven games in hand, that being our margin above the persistent Senators. Yester-day, as it happened, the Athletics held forth in Washington and, being in an ugly mood, they gave the Senators what seems to us a most convincing final argument why Washington should not fly a baseball pennant next year. The outcome of the argument was two straight defeats for the Senators.

BY virtue of all this, the Red Sox are swimming about serenely today in a stratum so far above Washington that those who have gloomily predicted that the Sox would "crack" and the Senators would come on from behind and beat us at the finish must disguise themselves and join the "I told you so" crowd, of which we have long been a humble member.

• • •

YES, Boston has won a pennant at last. This paper remarked that nearly three weeks ago, but this paper, being accustomed to tell the truth three weeks in advance of all others, it is necessary to fall in line now with a "confirmation"—as they say when your "inside tip" finally becomes common knowledge. To make it more clear, the Red Sox now lead the Senators by thirteen full games. Since the Sox have only twenty-eight more games to play, and the Senators have only twenty-six left, they'll have to look farther than we can see up this way to discover a pennant.

IMAGINE—if you can—the Red Sox losing all twenty-eight of those games. In that case the Senators would have to win fifteen and lose eleven of the games that remain in order to beat us. If the Red Sox lost just one-half of those twenty-eight remaining contests, the Senators could only tie us if they won all they have left. It is as sure as sure can be that the Red Sox will win at least half the games they have left, and it's as sure as all that again that the Senators won't win all the games they must play between now and the end of the season. Why, they have a job on their hands this afternoon with Connie Mack's hungry and vengeance-seeking world's champions, who are trailing them but half a game and who are ready to snap at them right now. Mack wants second place, and it looks like he'll get what he's after. And does anybody imagine that if the Senators beat the Athletics this afternoon they can go through the four games' series the rest of this week with the Red Sox without losing a game? Not on your life! They're lucky if they WIN a game—except, perhaps, the one Walter Johnson will pitch.

YOU don't have to study THIS "dope." It has ceased to be "dope." Remember—if the Senators win ALL the games they have left and the Red Sox win only half, the pennants won. The Senators, as pointed out above, can't possibly win all, and if anybody tells you that the Red Sox won't win many, many more than half their remaining games, notify the nearest policeman about him.

IF the American League pennant was not won before, Lebor Day settled it for good and forever. They're ready to retain the carpenters at Fenway Park now and, next week, you're likely to see extra stands going up for that world's series crowd.

• • •

IN giving the New Yorkers their sixteenth trimming, Joe Wood, who beat them, 1 to 0, had to pitch some baseball. It was a shutout, or a tie or a defeat. Joe could not stand defeat, hadn't been for after all the world's records now. By beating the Yankees, he won his thirtieth game this season and took his fourteenth straight victory. He is now two games behind Walter Johnson's American League record for consecutive victories and five games behind "Rube" Marquard's world's record, with a good chance of beating both.

YOU never can guess who Jake Stahl will use in the box. We've tried many times—and usually failed. Jake prefers the system of regular rotation, and that's as good a tip as we can give. He is most likely to break it up when he has on hand a pitcher who has been withdrawn from preceding games, and who, therefore, has not done his share of the work. That's why he used Bedient instead of Collins yesterday. After having won sixteen games out of nineteen since his return from the West, all his pitchers look nearly alike to Stahl.

• • •

IF it could be engineered so that Wood would pitch the day following Johnson's first appearance in the great series, it would be of advantage to the Red Sox for the records. For, naturally, Johnson would work his hardest to keep his own mark of sixteen straight games secure from the trespassing of Joe Wood.

DAVIS QUITS AS NAPS' MANAGER

CLEVELAND, Sept. 3.—Harry H. Davis, manager of the Cleveland American League baseball team has resigned. Outfielder Joe Birmingham was temporarily appointed to fill his place.

The team's poor showing and the fact that he has been subjected to severe criticism by the public and press are given as Davis' reason for resigning.

Davis came to the Cleveland club last Spring after many years of service with the Philadelphia Americans as first baseman and captain.

Davis succeeded George Stovall, present manager of the St. Louis American League team, who had been traded to that club notwithstanding he had landed the Cleveland team in third place in the 1911 race, although when he took charge it was in sixth place.

Diamond Gossip

The slump of those Tigers is due chiefly to the fact that Tyrus R. Cobb can play only one position at a time.

The way the Cubs go marching on would make a man enthuse.

There may be something in the rumor that the Pirate slump is due to golf. They have been playing baseball as if they were thinking of golf.

There is always a silver lining, etc, etc. Those White Sox fans can point with pride to the fact that Kid Gleason has the best clutching average in the American League.

A study of baseball dope reveals the fact that the Browns have succeeded in winning one game in a row, which constitutes a winning streak in St. Louis.

The Washington fans must be a contented lot to think that Groom wasn't disposed of. Several times the management of the Senators asked for waivers on him.

Eppa Rixby, the new Philadelphia phenom, is so big up and down they had to remove a partition to give him enough room to stretch out in a sleeping car.

• • •

Eddie Hallinan, infielder, has been released by the St. Louis Browns. He was carried on the payroll three years without helping much. He was a good fielder, but couldn't hit.

• • •

Jimmy Lavender's work hasn't passed unnoticed. Lavender's salary has been increased twice since the season opened. This token of appreciation by the Cubs' management of the young pitcher's work has brought its reward. Lavender is working like a beaver for the success of the team.

• • •

Wilson is likely to do a lot of backstopping for the Giants the next few days. Manager McGraw believes Meyers is growing stale, so is thinking about giving him a rest before the tremendous struggle toward the end of the season comes. This will let Wilson have his long-awaited chance.

Griffith Is After New Johnson

Callahan Beats Out Old Fox

By BILL BAILEY.

This Clark Griffith person apparently is attempting to corrall all the good young ball players.

His was after Ernest Johnson, the Chicago lad now with the White Sox. Incidentally the leader of the Senators says he would have had the man, too, if he hadn't thought that he was being overcharged.

Johnson formerly played semi-pro ball in Chicago. He was not in good standing with the Dubuque club of the Three Eye League and the impression prevailed that he could be secured for a few hundred dollars.

Well, Griff was willing to pay the few hundred all right. But he balked when the price rose to $1,500. Now he wishes he hadn't. Because President Comiskey is reported to have paid that amount and $1,400 in addition.

So was Johnson lost to the Senators and added to the White Sox. Which is one fine recommendation. For anybody that Griff goes after this year seems to develop into a wonder.

This same Johnson person is a fine illustration of the theory that it pays to hustle at the morning practice. Perhaps you don't know the usual procedure at the m. affair.

The fellows get together and some pitcher who isn't likely to work in the afternoon gets out there and proves that he has an arm by tossing the ball in the general direction of the plate.

That's about what it amounts to. The batters attempt to see just how far they can hit the sphere. That's the usual procedure. Not so with "Kid" Gleason about.

He has an idea that there should be considerable "pep" displayed on the field in the morning as well as in the afternoon.

Johnson apparently got the hunch that he could make himself look mighty good if he also took this forenoon practice seriously. He did. He hustled about as if it were a regular game and pretty soon had both the manager and the coach looking at him. He played such a hustling game at short that Cal figured he might as well find out whether the young fellow was just a morning player or whether he could go that gait all day.

So in he went and against the Senators, too.

And the recruit surely played some baseball. It may have been a flash in the pan. Johnson may never repeat. But he certainly did play a beautiful game at short in his debut. He threw one runner out on a ball which he grabbed back of second. He tossed out another from deep short.

He came on fast, grabbed one slow bounder and had it in Collins' hand before the runner got to first. He cut off Cashion at third when it required quick thinking and quick execution to turn the trick. He beat out one bunt and laced out a clean single. He looked fine.

It isn't going to be said here that he is a world better. Not until he proves more because judging from two hurriedly offer makes one look foolish. Remember what Bob Messenger did? In his first game he went from first to third on an infield out and was proclaimed a whale on the bases. But he never repeated.

Johnson looked good in his first game. Understand that doesn't mean that he will make Weaver a regular occupant of the bench. But there is one thing certain, and that is that the fellow who gets away to a good start always has the edge on the fellow who gets away badly.

Great Day of Sport At Green Harbor

GREEN HARBOR, Sept. 3.—The Summer season came to a close here yesterday to a blaze of glory. The feature of the day was a series of athletic sports. The Green Harbor baseball team defeated the Marshfield nine in a stirring eleven-inning contest by the score of 6 to 4. Johnny Fearin did the honors on the mound for the winners and struck out eleven men.

There were several spirited athletic contests. The 100-yard swimming race for girls was won by Florence Cleary, with Helena Goff second. The men's 100-yard swimming race was won by Leo Vogal, while Charles Walton captured second honors.

The rest of the program resulted as follows:

Tub race—Won by Ed. McGurty; second, Leo Pigeon.

Girls' swimming race—Won by Leo Vogal, 100-yard boys' swimming race—Won by G. Spang.

Girls swimming race, 100 yards—Won by M. Cushing; second, Miss Goff.

Men's swimming race, 100 yards—Won by H. Cramer; second, T. Silvervin.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 300,000 more than its next highest competitor and 100,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

Davy Star of Annual Regatta on Charles

Frank Davy of the Providence Boat Club was the star of the annual regatta of the New England-Amateur Rowing Association on the Charles River Basin. He won the intermediate and senior single scull events, the latter in less than 13 minutes, after showing the way from start to finish in the intermediate event.

William De Rose of the Springfield Boat Club won the novice singles. In the junior double sculls Elliot Farley, the old Harvard wrestler, and C. Wigglesworth, Jr., were first in a pair for the Donovan brothers of the Shawmut Rowing Association. The latter made a plucky fight, but their lack of weight was a handicap.

Waltham Canoe Club won the war canoe event from the Cochero Canoe Club and the Dedham Boat Club, winning by over a single length. The canoe paddles, single, was captured by E. P. Schmidt of the Cochero Canoe Club. In the club fours it was the Somerset Canoe Club that was victorious, its margin being only a slight one over the Cochee four.

The centipede race between the Shawmut Rowing Association and the Union Boat Club was interesting. It was won by the Shawmuts.

MANDOT MASTER OF JOE RIVERS

By H. M. WALKER.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Sept. 3.—A popular idol was knocked from its foundation, but before the pieces could be gathered up a new hero stood with both feet on the pedestal.

Joe Mandot, of New Orleans, Memphis and other Southern points, decisively whipped the coast marvel, Joe Rivers, and at the finish of the twentieth round was carried from the ring on the shoulders of his newly made California friends.

Master of all that goes to make up the boxing game, Mandot proved himself to be a worthy challenger for the lightweight title by whipping Rivers so soundly that Referee Ryan's action in awarding the decision to the French fighter was but a formality.

Rivers, before the Pacific A. C. at Venice, with approximately a $20,000 house in attendance, Mandot and Rivers fought through to the end of their twenty-round contest without a knock-down.

At long range Mandot was a demon for execution. He used both right and left with equally good effect. Time after time he rocked Rivers' head with clean clouts, and his body smashes, as a rule, caused Rivers to wince.

Boxing Results

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 3.—Jim Flynn won from Charlie Miller, the latest "white hope" here, when Miller refused to come up for the sixteenth round. For the first eleven rounds the fighting was about even, but Flynn kept handing out heavier and heavier punches. Miller weighed 218, Flynn 232.

Miller namely stayed through the fifteenth round, but, claiming that two of his ribs had been broken and that he was barely able to walk, he ignored the gong for the sixteenth. Miller's condition was plainly such that he could not continue.

NEW BEDFORD, Sept. 2.—Joe Farren of East Boston and Young McDonough of Manchester boxed a twelve-round draw here at the New Bedford A. C., Farren outfought and outslugged McDonough and the majority of the spectators thought he should have had the decision.

• • •

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—Eddie McGoorty of Oshkosh, Wis., knocked out Dave Smith, both lightweight, in the eighth. Lightheavyweight championships of Australia, in the first round of a scheduled ten-round bout at Madison Square Garden. Smith was on his feet when the referee intervened, but the foreign fighter was out to all purposes.

Louis de Ponthieu, lightweight champion of France, outpointed Tommy Garry, of Chicago.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 3.—Young Saylor of Indianapolis and Sammy Trott of Columbus, both lightweights, fought ten rounds here, with no decision.

• • •

TRINIDAD, Colo., Sept. 3.—Benny Chavise of Trinidad was awarded the decision over Monte Attell of San Francisco on a foul in the twelfth round of a grueling fight here.

The delivery of the foul caused wild excitement. Spectators crowded into the ring and the platform collapsed, but no one was injured.

PROVIDENCE, Sept. 3.—Young O'Neil of Woonsocket won from Young Miller of Pawtucket on a foul in the twelfth round of a bout scheduled for eight rounds at the Marseille A. C. The contest was for the welterweight title of Rhode Island.

SCRANTON, Pa., Sept. 3.—In six rounds of fast milling Jack MacFarron of Allentown and Kid Wagner of Wilkesbarre failed to settle the lightweight championship of Northeastern Pennsylvania.

• • •

DETROIT, Sept. 3.—Freddie Hicks of Detroit won an easy victory over Billy Stein, who claims the middleweight championship of the South.

JEANETTE OUTPOINTED.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sept. 3.—Joe Jeanette, claimant for the world's heavyweight championship on the strength of Jack Johnson's retirement, was given the surprise of his life when Jeff Clarke "The fighting ghost," decisively outpointed him in a six-round encounter.

While no decision was given, it was the consensus of opinion that Clarke had a shade.

McGraw Develops Own Material

Giants' Leader Plans Years Ahead

By RUBE MARQUARD.

The Giants' Great Pitcher.

I HAVE often marvelled over the fact that even in the best of a pennant race, such as the one in which our club is now engaged, Manager John J. McGraw of the Giants, finds time to give the future a good deal of consideration and to maintain a training school for the production of baseball stars for the years to come.

You would think that a man fighting for a championship would forget the future—and most managers would; but not McGraw. It is further evidence of the baseball genius of the Giant chief that he can keep in front with one bunch of ball players and at the same time build underneath them, as you might say, a second team to eventually take the place of the first string.

The average manager bases his success on picking up men who are naturally good ball players, and who only require a little development. McGraw needs only the very roughest material of youth and speed to form his teams. He is essentially a manufacturer—a maker of players. From one end of the season to the other he has a training school operating in the infield of his regular ball club, and he manages to find time to produce one or two stars a year, even while the fight for the pennant is raging.

A great instructor himself, McGraw has the assistance of one of the best teachers in baseball—Wilbert Robinson. Thus, too, Matheweon is always ready to help a youngster; and no one knows baseball better than Matty.

All of the regular members of the team are glad to assist a kid just breaking in. There is no club in the country so free from jealousy as the Giants. The fact that it is a young team, with years of ball before every regular, makes it a hard team for a youngster to break into, except as a bench student, but the newcomers all get every chance in the world to make good.

It is a great thing for a youngster to be associated with such a crowd as the Giants, outside of the baseball possibilities. He learns clean living, if he doesn't know it already. He gets to know some of the greatest successes in baseball, and learns how they made their way. It is something for a boy to be associated with such men as Meyers, and Matty, and Wiltse, and Merkle, and Ames, and all the other members of the club, even if he never makes good as a ball player.

Bench Primary Class.

In what you might call his bench primary class, McGraw now has half a dozen young pitchers, and that number will probably be increased before the close of the season, as several others are expected to report. In addition to this primary class, McGraw has another more advanced grade of students, composed of infielders, who will one day be stars of the game.

It may be remembered that when I first reported to the Giants, the publicity I had received because of the $11,000 paid for me caused a great demand that I appear in a regular game. I believe that it was against McGraw's own judgment that he finally sent me in to work, and the result was that I got a good beating as a result of inexperience, and my development was retarded for a long time.

McGraw does not try to hurry the development of a man. He goes along slowly and carefully with him, studying not only his ability, but his temperament, and the day that McGraw says a man is done. His mistakes in judgment on ball players have been mighty few and far between. How many youngsters discarded by him after trials have become stars?

Among the recruit pitchers now on the Giant bench are Dave Robertson, Ernest Shore, Theodore Goulait, La Rue Kirby and Binder. The first named is a left hander. He was picked up by a McGraw scout while playing in the outlaw Tidewater League of Virginia.

McGraw Insists on Speed.

Natural speed is one of the best recommendations a recruit can have to McGraw. He bought Josh Devore on the strength of the statement that he had a great deal of speed, although the man who sold him said that Josh was very green. The speed assertion attracted McGraw. Josh had to go through the same course of sprouts as everybody else on the Giants, including a year in the bushes.

Beneath his brusque mannerisms and way of speaking, McGraw has an infinite patience. Errors of judgment may irritate him, but errors of hands or feet are never noticed. A "boot" means nothing to him. A "bone" arouses his ire.

He will take hold of a youngster who is so raw that the average manager would probably release him after a glance; work him along very patiently, until one day he presents a new star.

I believe that McGraw can see a ball player quicker than any man in the business. I doubt if it takes him more than a day or so to correctly estimate a fellow, and many a time he has demonstrated his judgment by turning loose some youngster whose work most people thought stamped him as a coming sensation, and clinging to another raw recruit, who has shown the casual observer nothing.

During the playing season, when he has four or five youngsters sitting on the bench, McGraw apparently pays no attention to them whatever, but nothing they do escapes his eye. He watches them at batting practice, and at fielding practice, and he frequently drops a quick word of instruction.

The young pitchers seem to get even less attention than the fielders, but as a matter of fact McGraw is constantly looking them over while they pitch to the batters in batting practice.

Wilbert Robinson, coach of the Giant pitchers, warms up with the kids, and instructs them as he works. McGraw frequently wanders over back of the youngsters while this is going on to see how he is doing. The very first rudiment of the McGraw school for pitchers has to do with the youngster's pitching motion. In fact, I understand that McGraw's first question to his scouts about a pitcher is "what kind of a motion has he got?"

I had to alter my whole style of pitching to conform to the McGraw method, because Mac does not like a side-arm delivery.

In a close game McGraw has two wonderful pinch hitters in Harry McCormick and Otis Crandall, the former available against a right-hander and the latter death to southpaws. If he wants a sacrifice or to base on balls, Artie Shafer is the emergency man. If he wants a fleet runner, Josh Devore fills the bill, while little Groh can relieve Fletcher at Doyle at any time.

McGraw likes players of his own making. He makes fewer deals for men from other teams than any of the managers. He prefers a player who has been through his own personal school. He would pay any amount for an experienced player if he felt that the veteran could help him win a pennant, but as a general proposition you would have a hard time handing him an old-timer from some other team. He likes his own productions.

In fact, I guess it is history that when he does trade he never takes the worst of the trade.

Thorpe Is Now the All-Around Champion

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—James Thorpe, the famous Carlisle Indian athlete, won the A. A. U. all-round championships, surpassing all records, at Celtic Park, Long Island, Ten events composed the program, of which Thorpe captured seven and finished second in the three remaining events, totalling 7476 points, displacing the former record of 7285 points made by Martin J. Sheridan in 1906.

Thorpe created a new all-around record for the running high jump, clearing the bar at 6 feet 1⅝ inches, the best previous performance of this event being 6 feet. J. Berdenus of Princeton, N. J., who won the title in 1908, secured second place with a point score of 6902.

Perhaps the most sensational performance of Thorpe was in the mile run. Although worn out by his previous efforts in the preceding events, the famous Indian not only won by a big margin, but covered the distance in 5 minutes 26 seconds, which gave him 659 out of a possible 1000 points. Thorpe' best performance outside of the high jump, was the running broad, when he cleared 23 feet 3 inches.

Hans Kohlemainen, the Olympic long-distance champion, was introduced to the spectators, and ran a three-mile exhibition.

Pendleton May Join New York Yankees

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—Talbot Pendleton, captain of the Princeton football team, sprinter, and for two years a fielder on the Tiger baseball team, has been visiting with his friend, Sterrett of the Highlanders. So there comes a red-hot report that when Pendleton is graduated from Princeton next June he will follow in Sterrett's footsteps and become a member of the Highlanders. Sterrett introduced him to Wolverton and the two were closeted in earnest confab.

Pendleton is very fast and is said to have more speed than Ty Cobb, but when it comes to being Ty Cobb, many players, no matter how much speed they may have, are called, but few are chosen. If Pendleton proved to be two-thirds of a Ty Cobb he would be a prize.

Fans Start Bonfires During Baseball Game

CINCINNATI, Sept. 3.—Near the close of the second game between the Reds and the Cardinals yesterday, one of the most remarkable sights ever seen on the local ball park was witnessed. It was almost dark and the crowd had been calling for a called game.

When Umpire Eason refused to listen to the cries, bonfires, made of programs, sprang up all over the park, and in a few moments thousands of them were in evidence.

Kramer Wins World's Mile Bicycle Title

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 3.—Frank Kramer, the national sprint champion, won the one-mile professional bicycling championship of the world at the Newark Velodrome, defeating Alfred Brenda of Australia and E. Perchicot of France in the final event.

Less than a half wheel separated the riders at the finish of the race, the time of which was two minutes flat.

Marcel Dupuy and Amiel Friel of France were eliminated in the semi-finals.

ROSS STRIKES OUT 21 IN TITLE GAME

Before a crowd of 5,000 people at the Locust Street Grounds yesterday, the St. Eulalias won the championship of South Boston by decisively beating the South Boston White Sox 7 to 0. Ross was in excellent form and had the White Sox at his mercy throughout. He struck out twenty-one men, allowed but one hit and but three men saw first base. Benson also pitched well for the losers, twelve falling victims to his curves. He allowed but five hits, but these bunched, combined with loose playing behind him, resulted in a victory for the St. Eulalias. The score:

St. Eulalias..	1	0	1	1	0	4	0	0	x	—7

Kid McCoy's Ballad of Brixton Jail.

The following poem was composed by the pugilist, Kid McCoy, in Brixton Jail in London, while he was waiting for extradition proceedings:

Kindness' seeds are sown by deeds
Cultured by Love's affection.
Nature's arms protects from harm
All those who need protection.

Love's bright charm allays all alarm
And strengthens the will of the mind,
So when in doubt turn things about
And view them from behind.

Let reason's bright light guide
desire and appetite,
Should happiness be your goal.
Don't scatter to the wind the thoughts of the mind,
They that come from your soul.

Schulte Begins Ninth Year as Big Leaguer

Frank "Wildfire" Schulte, champion home runner of the National League last season, is to celebrate two birthdays this month, but unfortunately for the Cub fans, who might wish to have some festivities in his honor on either of these anniversaries, he will be absent from Chicago on both dates, which are the seventeenth and twenty-fifth.

On the first mentioned date Schulte will be thirty years old, Cohocton, N. Y., having received a lot of free advertising by reason of Frank having been born there.

Schulte's other birthday will be the eighth anniversary of his debut in the major leagues.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—Eddie Graney, manager of the Tuxedo Club of San Francisco, has agreed to give Ad Wolgast, lightweight champion, $15,000 for his end, win, lose or draw, to fight twenty rounds with Willie Ritchie at his club on Thanksgiving Day. Wolgast is in the East and is expected to answer within a few days.

PILGRIMS MEET GIANTS IN FINAL

The Pilgrims and the Giants will mingle in the last game of the series at the South End Grounds today, and another hard battle seems to be in store.

Kling's boys had to yield both games to John McGraw's scrappy bunch yesterday, but only after a terrific struggle, with the mighty Matheweon doing the honors in both contests.

That the Boston fans are anxious to get a line on the Giants, whom it is reasonable to suppose will be the Red Sox opponents in the World's Series, was evidenced by the tremendous throng which turned out to see yesterday's double-header. Nearly twenty thousand people crowded into the park, while about ten thousand more were turned away before the game started.

Although they lost yesterday, the Pilgrims are anxious to retrieve themselves today, and will battle all the harder to give the McGraw tribe a little jolt.

Otto Hess is the most likely choice of Manager Kling, while Jeems McIlrath may show his clever youngster, Pearson, who has been the most consistent winner of his squad in recent games.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN'S DAILY DOUBLE

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"WELL, George," said the Manicure Lady, "I don't suppose you've heard the latest scandal, as Bob Kiley would say. Oh, dear me!"

"Well, now what?" snapped the Head Barber.

"You don't need to bark like you had the hydrolics, or whatever they call that there dog disease," said the Manicure Lady. "I guess I won't tell you now. You can go right on getting them base notes ready for the early morning rush. I hope you don't get a tip today, and what do you know about that?"

"I didn't go for to hurt your feelings," said the Head Barber.

"I don't care what you went for to do," said the Manicure Lady. "You get awful fresh with me sometimes, George. On the square, the way that gents treat ladies of recent years, I guess the age of rivalry is dead."

"The age of what?" asked George.

"The age of rivalry," replied the Manicure Lady.

"You ought to go and buy a nice little dictionary," said the Head Barber. "You can get one cheap now, with a few of them coupons they slip you at the cigar stores. You don't mean the age of rivalry, you mean the age of chivarees; you know, kid, them old knights used to go out with their swords and horses, and fight for their ladies fair. Then they would get married, and then there would be chivarees. That's why they call it the age of chivarees."

"Gee, I wish I had went to school as much as you," exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "The way you go on anybody would think that you could make a Harvard graduate look like a Joe from the outskirts of St. Jo, Missouri. But I guess the old poet was right when he said that a little learning is a dangerous thing, and that there business college education that you have got is likely to be the death of you some day, or else the cause of you going up the river to one of them cute little cells that they use for folks that is used to walking in their sleep.

"But I guess I might as well tell you what I started out to say. The worst has came! Brother Wilford has went and got married. It was a awful shock to all of us. We sat around in the parlor and talked it over, and we was as downcast over it now as the bride will be later, when she gets a flash at Wilfred's weekly salary."

"A kid like him oughtn't to get married," said the Head Barber. "Boys ought to wait until they can earn as much as I do before they get married, and then they'll get along finer than their creditors. Who did he marry?"

"A girl that's in vaudeville," said the Manicure Lady, savagely. "A girl that beats the drum in a musical act. Gee, George, your old heart would beat sudden like if you got a flash at her.

"Poor Wilfred thinks she is a dream. He is at work on a poem for her called 'My Heart Beat When You Beat the Drum.' Oh, well, I suppose after their honeymoon is over they will get along with her beating the drum and Wilfred beating the bat-her."

The Ten Ages of Beauty

No. 1—The Primeval Girl

By MARGARET HUBBARD AYER

"WHAT type of woman do you consider the most beautiful?"

This question is the bugbear of the artist and well-known illustrator, for he or she, woman of the brush and pencil is asked it over the teacup, and by the woman who is sitting for her portrait and always and eternally by the newspaper person who comes to ask the artist's views on that or any other subject.

"Don't you think there's far too much talk about feminine beauty, anyhow?" said a very practical man who is a successful portrait painter, almost despite himself.

"Well," I returned, "if you want to put it down in dollars and cents, if there was no such thing as feminine beauty, and the eternal striving toward the ideal, a whole lot of people would go out of business. For instance, over three million dollars worth of lace was imported last year, besides all the lace manufactured in the United States; of all materials lace is the most feminine, and to me it always suggests the adornment of a beautiful woman.

"Millions are spent at home, no longer merely for covering, but for beautifying women. The woman who isn't beautiful and can make no claims whatever to good looks, except in a few startling exceptions, is not the one who spends large sums of money on her personal appearance.

"If all women were quite plain, the cost of living would fall with a sickening thud."

"But then would living be worth while?" returned the artist gallantly, and so we got back to our first question, which is one that every one asks themselves one time or another, and which is just as important to the girl who is trying to grow into a semblance of her ideal as it is to the man who expects some day to marry that ideal as personified by her charming self.

The Youthful Idea

At ten years of age you were quite certain that the most beautiful woman on earth was your mother, but mothers are in a class entirely by themselves, and so you decided to be sister number two, and saw yourself as beautiful as teacher or sister, or some beautiful friend whose visits cast a radiance over the home.

A little later the severity of teacher and sister faded that ideal and your imagination knew no further height to scale than the marvelous vision in pink tartan and spangles who rode on the big white horse on the occasion of your first visit to the circus.

Then came the world of history and books with wonderful heroines of all kinds, each influencing you and swaying your desires and wishes toward her own particular type of beauty.

One week you were for being like Cleopatra, and worshiped at the shrine of the red-haired girl.

The next your ideal has changed to the mischievous and demure Jane Austen type of girl, and so on ad infinitum, or until character and circumstance and the not improbable HE molded you into the one particular type which you represent.

Miss Nell Brinkley's picture, I take it, shows us the elemental woman whose primitive characteristics form part of the complicated mentality of the girl of today.

Friend of the wolf and guardian of the fire, ready to wake with a spring and pounce upon her enemy, or to fall upon her lover's neck, the elemental woman slumbers between wild beast and spark of flame akin to the one with undreamed-of possibilities, at once the hope and the riddle of the race.

The Primitive Woman

This primitive woman with her strength and her fearlessness, with her unconscious powers, her sharp instincts and intuitions, has been the ideal of virile poets like Walt Whitman, like Richard Wagner, and is the embodiment of Goethe's eternal feminine.

The girl in the picture may have belonged to a savage epoch, but you and I know that she still exists clothed in the satin and lace of today.

I have seen her looking from under her straight and leveled brows, her black hair coiled smoothly and tightly at the back of her head, swinging down the streets of the city, wearing the little suffragist's parade hat, her face aflame with the enthusiasm for her Cause.

She was the primitive woman demanding once more the liberty that had been taken from her; fighting again in a new way not only for the good of her own children, but for the children of other women, too.

This wonderful elemental woman is different from the woman that she is helped by the fashions and the refinements of modern dress. She's only foolish when she tries to imitate in appearance the women of smaller minds and less noble purposes. Straightforwardness and simplicity are the basis of her character, and should show in her attire. Her beauty is derived from the sun's glow, the caress of the wind, pure air, and water. If she could go back to olden days where she had to fight for her food, or to cultivate it herself, wringing her daily portion from the soil, she would again become the symbol of the strength and fires of the race once more and demand her portion of toil.

The light of inspiration is in her eye. If you have seen her as I have, working for the betterment of society among the social workers, perhaps at Hull House in Chicago, or at Greenwich Settlement, or perhaps among the ranks of the Leading workers, or in her own modest way fighting to maintain her children, you will recognize her at once and will see in her the noblest and grandest type of feminine beauty.

Hunting a Husband

No. 30—The Widow Becomes E cited Over Her Motor Trip, but Blanchard Puts a Damper on Her Feelings

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

WEDNESDAY was very hot, but, in spite of the scorching heat, Beatrice decided to go downtown and make several purchases. She had written a special delivery letter to Helen, telling her of Dr. Haynes' proposed expedition, saying if it would be entirely convenient she and the physician would lunch with her, after which the two women might inspect the furnished cottage of which there had been talk. If this did not suit Helen, would she please write at once? This letter had evidently been received the evening of the day on which it was sent, for early on Wednesday Beatrice had received a telegram, saying: "Delighted to see you both on Thursday. Helen."

Beatrice smiled as she read the message. "Of course she is delighted," she mused, "for she would be glad if I would accept attention from any man rather than from her uncle. She thinks Dr. Haynes would be a counter-attraction." Then she laughed as she recalled a sentence which she had written in her letter to Helen. It ran: "I do not care for old bachelors, but Dr. Haynes is an exception, as he is as jolly as if he were twenty-five instead of forty, and I am sure I will enjoy the motor-trip with him."

She was so certain of Henry Blanchard's affection for her that she knew that even if Helen were to read that paragraph she would think that she had written it just to disarm his nieces' suspicions about himself and the writer. Yet Beatrice had given little thought to Henry Blanchard for the past few days. Certainly since the automobile excursion had been proposed he had had small room in her thoughts. Woman-like, she had begun to plan yesterday what she was to wear on the ride. Motor trips had not been in her line, and she decided that she had no cost or hat that suited this occasion. Her pretty walking hat had to be an unpretending that would catch the wind, and over which one could not tie a veil. Her large veiling hat was even less suited to driving. Her dark blue cloth suit and jacket would be gray with dust by the time she had gone a mile on the country roads. No, she decided that, like Flora McFlimsey in the rhyme, she "had nothing to wear." And this fact accounted for her going downtown early on Wednesday morning. She had a white linen dress which she had embroidered elaborately, and she planned to wear this tomorrow, with white silk stockings and white colonial pumps. But she must have a dust coat, hat and veil to complete her outfit.

Of course it was an extravagance, she mused, and yet if she was going to spend the Summer in the country, where she would, perhaps, often go motoring with various friends, she would need the articles she planned to buy.

She had no trouble in finding what she wanted. Automobile accessories are numerous and have a subtle attraction that coaxes the money from one's pockets. First there was the dust coat. The widow looked at linen dusters in natural colors and in gray. They did fairly well, she supposed, but, somehow, they did not look as nice as they would pongee. So she told the saleswoman that she would inspect pongee coats next, and if she found nothing among those to suit her she would take a linen garment.

In her own heart she knew that this was only a pretty fiction with which she was pretending to deceive herself, and that in the end she would get the coat she liked best, in spite of the cost. The linen duster she found cotton, too, were stunning, at "marked down" to $5. The pongee coat which she tried on cost $15.50.

It had been higher earlier in the season, the saleswoman said, and was "a wonderful bargain." She also assured the customer that it was "very smart" with its "dust undersleeve," drawn in at the wrist, and the long outer sleeve with straps to make it tight or loose as desired. The collar, button, too, were stunning, as were the deep pockets and the belt holding in the full back. Of course Beatrice bought the garment and ordered it sent home at once, so that she would surely receive it today. She then selected a "peanut straw" hat and bought a soft white silk scarf to twist around it. She was not sure, as she left the veil counter, whether she preferred a pale blue or a pale pink veil, so she got both.

"I will wear them both, Summer," she said, when thoughts of economy obtruded themselves.

At 5 o'clock that night she stood before her mirror, her new cloak on, and the hat, about which she had draped the scarf, on her head. The hat was tied down coquettishly by the pink veil. Beatrice felt as one ship under full sail looks, she thought, she looked as if she had spent months and years in motoring.

"Don't you like the outfit, Mary?" she asked of the maid, who stood by looking on admiringly.

"Indeed, ma'am, it's fine, and it sure does make you look young," exclaimed the girl. Jean who had been put to bed an hour earlier, but who was still wide awake, forgot to be fretful as she watched her mother.

"I like your flags," she declared. "You're going to wear your tomorrow when you go to see a pretty place to take me to, don't you?"

"Indeed, I am, darling," replied Beatrice, stooping to kiss the child.

At this juncture Jack came gravely into the room. "The doorbell rang three times," he stated, reproachfully, "and at last I answered it. It's Mr. Blanchard, mother."

"Mr. Blanchard!" faltered Beatrice, while Mary hastily shut the door leading into the hall.

"Yes," went on Jack, "he said he just heard today that Jean was sick. He called her JANE, mother. Doesn't he know her real name?"

"Never mind, son," said Beatrice, hastily. "What did he say then?"

"He said he supposed you could not leave her long enough to see him, but that he just wanted to know how she was and what he could do for you."

"And you said?" asked Beatrice, hastily removing the new coat and hat.

"I said," continued Jack, "that she's been real sick, but that I guessed you could leave her to see him, since you'd left her to go downtown and buy new clothes today."

"Oh, Jack!" sighed the mother, "will you never learn not to tell things! But never mind, dear, it's all right. Go and tell Mr. Blanchard that I can see him for a few minutes, and will be right in."

She had time to plan an explanation before she gave her suitor her hand in greeting and listened to his expressions of sympathy.

"Yes, I have been most anxious," she said. "I have not left the child until Jean's your?"

"I'll wait upon the customer," she said, when thoughts of economy obtruded themselves.

Telling Mother

By DOROTHY DIX

EVERYBODY who writes advice to girls always begins with the admonition:

"GIRLS, CONFIDE IN YOUR MOTHERS."

So far as the counsel goes it is admirable. Any girl whose "intimate friend," as Kay Lou says, is her mother, is pretty safe, but the only objection is that, like most other pieces of good advice, it is hard to follow.

It would seem that it would be a girl's natural impulse to go to the one person who loves her best on earth with all her little joys and sorrows and perplexities, and that there would be nobody else to whom she could so easily open the secret doors of her heart as to her mother. Unfortunately quite the reverse of this is true. There is no one else with whom a girl is so shy as she is with her mother. No one to whom she cannot talk more freely about what she really thinks and feels, and hopes and plans to do. Practically every other woman in a girl's circle of acquaintances is really better acquainted with her than her mother.

It is a perpetual grievance with the majority of mothers that their daughters are not confidential with them, and they invariably blame the girls. But in reality the fault lies at the mother's door, and, paradoxically enough, the very love for her daughter raises up the barrier between them.

It is mother's devotion to Sally and her desire that Sally shall always do the proper thing that makes her a carping critic of Sally and her friends. It is mother's love, and her desire to shield Sally from even the possibility of danger, that makes her throw a wet blanket over everything that Sally proposed to do. It is mother's agonizing effort to keep Sally from falling in love with the wrong man and marrying him, that makes her virtuest every spoth that comes about Sally, and that prompts her to make satirical remarks about Sally's beaux and her small love affairs.

Can You Blame Her?

Mother's attitude is solely prompted by devotion and anxiety for Sally's welfare, but unless itself could invent no more effectual discourager of confidence and intimacy between the two. For Sally is young and ignorant, and very human, and so she takes her precious little foolish secrets to somebody who will receive them with respect and enthusiasm, instead of ridicule or a moral lecture. And can you blame her?

What temptation is there for a girl to confide in her mother when mother is one incarnate DON'T?

What encouragement is there to tell mother all about your plans and hopes when she will raise a thousand objections to everything and point out how much wiser it would be to do some other way?

How can a girl get up the courage to tell her mother that she has a queer, palpitating feeling about the heart when she sees the Jones boy coming down the street, when mother's favorite amusement is making fun of the hobble-de-hoys that pick Sally's books home from school, and that hang around on the street corners waiting for her to come out of the house?

Mother, herself, couldn't confide to anybody who always sat down upon her, and that's mother's attitude towards Sally, and she'll have to come down off of her pedestal, and be a companion, and not a critic if she wants to be her daughter's chum.

Of course girls ought to tell their mothers everything, but it is a condition, and not a theory that we confront in this question, and as a plain matter of fact they are not going to confide in mother unless mother shows them an unfailing sympathy, and makes it easy for them to do so. Therefore, I urge mothers to spend less time talking about it being daughter's duty to be confidential with them, and to use more tact in making smooth the road to confidence.

The trouble with the average mother is that she honors all diplomacy in handling her daughter, and yet there is no other such delicate proposition on earth as the young girl proposition. It can best be managed by following his directions I would give a porcupine the odds on possessing prickly points, and if ever there is an occasion where there is need for the iron hand in the velvet glove it is there.

She Is Arbitrary

Yet mother disdains finesse. She's arbitrary with Sally. She rides rough shod over Sally's tender susceptibilities. She treats Sally as if she were a baby at an age when Sally feels herself the wisest and most grown-up person alive, and then she complains that Sally doesn't confide in her.

It apparently never occurs to the mother that Sally isn't going to tell her when she has done a foolish thing if she knows that her confession is going to let her in for a lecture, and perhaps for having her little escapade dragged out into the family circle for general discussion. Nor is Sally going to whisper in her mother's ear the love speeches that have been made to her if she is aware that mother is going to make a good story about it and tell it at the next dinner she goes to in order to get a laugh.

Neither is Sally going to subject her friends to mother's inspection if she is perfectly aware beforehand that mother is going to pick them to pieces.

It is certainly a great pity that girls don't confide in their mothers, but nine times out of ten it's the mother's fault. She has made it impossible by her lack of understanding and sympathy and by her determination to rule over her children and make them conform to her ideals and submit to her will. These women are the very source of confidence with their tyranny.

They have no right to complain that their daughters don't tell them things. Confidence is not a duty. It is the reward of sympathy and understanding. We don't tell people things because we ought to. If we tell them at all it is because nothing is perfect until we have talked it over with them.

Do You Know That—

Billingsgate Market, London, has in one year received nearly 200,000 tons of fish, about one-third of which arrived by water.

More than a million tiny globules of fat are contained in a drop of milk.

Immigrants to Canada during the past fiscal year totalled over 350,000.

Among the Hungarians a reigning queen is officially termed a king.

So far back as 1566 a dictionary of slang was published.

London is the healthiest capital in Europe.

A full-grown elephant can carry three tons on its back.

Out of 760 samples of milk examined in London in three months, 106 were tuberculous, and the task of tracing the milk necessitated the examination of 8,719 cows at 102 farms scattered over the country.

HER HANDS AND ARMS MADE MARVELOUSLY BEAUTIFUL IN A SINGLE NIGHT

FREE PRESCRIPTION DID IT

Grace Bigson says: "Had nurses told me such wonderful results could be accomplished so quickly, I positively would not have believed it. My arms and hands were covered with freckles; my neck was dark and wrinkled from the use of high collars; my hands were tanned and the nails were red.

All those defects were removed by one application of a free prescription, which I am pleased to give to anyone. It's just as simple as it is effective. Go to any drug store and get one ounce each of Kalux Compound, a one-ounce bottle of Kalux into the two-ounce bottle, add one-quarter ounce of the white hand and fill with water. Prepare this prescription at your own home, then you know you are getting it right. Apply night and morning.

It makes the skin soft and beautiful, no matter how rough and ungainly your hands and arms are. One application will astonish you. I have given this prescription to thousands of women and they are all just as enthusiastic as I am. Try it on your neck and shoulders and you will be agreeably surprised."

Resinol Chem. Co., Baltimore, Md. July 17, 1909.

Gentlemen:—I became afflicted with eczema twenty-five years ago, but the itching and burning was so intense and continual that in 1884 I put myself in the care of a specialist in Philadelphia, who was a noted doctor and one to understand that by following his directions I would be cured or not, as the case might be, and if not any benefit, in fact, would be received from the money, but that at any age I would have to undergo the last of it.

This I tried to do till about 1903, when I was in Philadelphia, and called on the doctor to ask him if he knew of anything to cure me. He said, "Get a box of Resinol Ointment." I got it. The itching stopped the first time the Jar of Resinol was all used the cure was perfected. For the past three or four years I have had no soreness, but a single application of Resinol Ointment, I suspended perhaps a month or so, and it was cured in a month for the sum of fifty cents, the price of one jar of Resinol.

BUT Mr. Gryce's was not. The faint smile with which he smoothed with an easy, circling movement the already polished top of his ever present cane conveyed a secret complacency which called up a flash of discomfiture to his greatly irritated companion.

"He says that, does he? You found him on the whole tolerably straightforward, eh? A hard nut; but hard nuts are usually sound ones. Come, now! prejudice aside, what's your honest opinion of the man you've had under your eye and ear for three solid weeks? Hasn't there been the best of reasons for your failure? Speak up, my boy. Squarely, now."

"I can't. I hate the fellow. I hate any one who makes me look ridiculous. He—well, well, if you'll have it, sir, I will say this much. If it weren't for that blasted coincidence of the two deaths equally mysterious, equally under his eye, I'd stake my life on his honesty. But that coincidence stumps me and—and a sort of feeling I have here."

It is to be hoped that the slap he gave his breast, at this point, carried off some of his superfluous emotion. "You can't account for a feeling, Mr. Gryce. The man has no heart. He's as hard as rocks."

"A not uncommon lack where the head plays so big a part. We can't hang him on any such argument as that. You've found no evidence against him?"

"N—no." The hesitating admission was only a proof of Sweetwater's obstinacy.

"Then listen to this. The test with the letters failed, because what he said about them was true. They were not meant for him. Miss Challoner had another lover."

"Only another? I thought there were a half dozen, at least."

"Another whom she favored. The letters found in her possession—not the ones she wrote herself, but those which were written to her over the signature O. B. were not all from the same hand. Experts have been busy with them for a week, and their reports are unanimous. The O. B. who wrote the threatening lines acknowledged to by Orlando Brotherson, was not the O. B. who penned all of those love letters. The similarity in the writing misled us at first, but once the doubt was raised by Mr. Challoner's discovery of an allusion in one of them which pointed to another writer than Mr. Brotherson, and experts had no difficulty in reaching the decision I have mentioned."

Sweetwater Amazed

"Two O. B.'s! Isn't that incredible, Mr. Gryce?"

"Yes, it is incredible, but the incredible is not the impossible. The man you've been shadowing denies that these expressive effusions of Miss Challoner were meant for him. Let us see, then, if we can find the man they were meant for."

"The second O. B.?"

"Yes."

Sweetwater's face instantly lit up.

"Do you mean that I—after my egregious failure—am not to be kept on the dunce's seat? That you will give me this new job?"

"Yes. We don't know of a better man. It isn't your fault, you said it yourself, that water couldn't be squeezed out of a millstone."

"The Superintendent—how does he feel about it?"

"He was the first one to mention you."

"And the Inspector?"

"Is glad to see us on a new track."

A pause during which the eager light in the young detective's eye clouded over. Presently he remarked:

"How will the finding of another O. B. alter Mr. Brotherson's position? He still will be the one person on the spot, known to have cherished a grievance against the victim of this mysterious killing. To my mind, this discovery of a more favored rival brings in an element of motive which may rob our self-reliant friend of some of his complacency. We may further, rather than destroy, our case against Brotherson by locating a second O. B.'

Mr. Gryce's eyes twinkled.

"That won't make your task any more irksome," he smiled. "The loop we have thrown out is as likely to catch Brotherson as his rival. It all depends upon the sort of man we find in this second O. B.; and whether, in some way unknown to us, he gave her cause for the sudden and overwhelming rush of despair which clone supports this general theory of suicide."

"The prospect grows pleasing. Where am I to look for my man?"

"Your ticket is bought to Derby, Pennsylvania. If he is not employed in the great factories there, we do not know where to find him. We have no other clue."

"I see. It's a short journey I have before me."

"It'll bring the color to your cheeks."

Quick Action.

"Oh, I'm not kicking."

"You will start tomorrow."

"Wish it were today."

"And you will first inquire, not for O. B., that's too indefinite; but for a young girl by the name of Doris Scott. She holds the clue; or rather she is the clue to this second O. B."

"Another woman!"

"No, a child—well, I won't say child exactly; she must be sixteen."

"Doris Scott."

"She lives in Derby. Derby is a small place. You will have no trouble in finding this child. It was to her Miss Challoner's last letter was addressed. The one"—

"I begin to see."

"No, you don't, Sweetwater. The affair is as blind as your hat; nobody sees. We're just feeling along a thread. O. B.'s letters—the real O. B., I mean, are the manifest effusions possible. He's no more of a milksop than this Brotherson; and unlike your indomitable friend he seems to have some heart. I only wish he'd given us some facts; they would have been serviceable. But the letters reveal nothing except that he knew Doris. He writes in one of them: 'Doris is learning to embroider. It's like a fairy weaving a cobweb!' Doris isn't a very common name. She must be the same little girl to whom Miss Challoner wrote from time to time."

"Was this letter signed O. B.?"

"Yes; they all are. The only difference between his letters and Brotherson's is this: Brotherson's retain the date and address; the second O. B.'s do not."

"How not? Torn off, do you mean?"

"Yes, or rather, neatly cut away; and as none of the envelopes were kept, the only means by which we can locate the writer is through this girl Doris."

"If I remember rightly Miss Challoner's letter to this child was free from all mystery."

"Quite so. It is as open as the day That is why it has been mentioned as showing the freedom of Miss Challoner's mind five minutes before that fatal thrust."

Sweetwater took up the sheet Mr. Gryce pushed toward him and re-read these lines:

Dear Little Doris:

It is a snowy night, but it is all bright inside and I feel no chill in mind or body. I hope it is so in the little cottage in Derby; that my little friend is as happy with harsh winds blowing from the mountains as she was on the Summer day she came to see me at the hotel. I like to think of her as cheerful and beaming, rejoicing in tasks which make her so womanly and sweet. She is often in my mind. Affectionately your friend,

EDITH A. CHALLONER.

"That is to a child of sixteen!"

"Just so."

"D-o-r-i-s spells something besides Doris."

One morning old Mr. Hoit was industriously plying his hammer on a wooden contrivance under the kitchen window in the back yard, when a neighbor called to him after his wife, who had been ill some time.

The old chap's reply, however, was heard by some one in the house coughing very loudly.

"Poor dear! I s'pose that's 'er coughin', pit it?" cried the sympathetic old lady.

"No, ma'am, no woman," replied the aged tailor, surveying his handiwork proudly; "it ain't a coffin. It's a 'en-coop."

Two ladies, while taking their morning walk, were met by an old gipsy woman, who said:

"Pretty ladies, I will show you your future husbands' faces in a bucket of water for the small sum of one shilling."

The ladies at once gave the old woman the shilling and went into a room and looked anxiously into the bucket of water, but only saw their own reflections.

"We only see our own faces," said the ladies.

"Well, they will be your husband's when you are married," was the cool reply.

Summer Stomach Abuse

A WORD OF WARNING ABOUT COLD FOOD AND DRINKS

The arrival of hot weather brings with it the temptation to indulge in cold food and beverages to a degree which is nothing short of dangerous.

Imagine the effect of loading up your overheated stomach with ice-cold solids and liquids. The first result is the stoppage of the flow of gastric juices upon which digestion absolutely depends.

The bowels are almost certain to become deranged, and cramps, diarrhoea or cholera morbus are immediately produced. These are classed as "summer complaints" and usually cause great distress. Indigestion, dyspepsia and other diseases are established by the same kind of stomach abuse.

When the first symptoms of distress appear, waste no time, but take which will give you immediate relief.

This splendid remedy for all stomach and allied diseases has created quite a furore since introduction, and it is today not only the most popular medicine in the country, but throughout the world.

POSTAL CLERKS IN LIVELY CLASH

Reports of officers, seating of delegates, reading of telegrams and letters from subordinate branches and United States Senators and Congressmen took up the attention today of the delegates attending the thirteenth annual convention of the National Association of Postoffice Clerks in Faneuil Hall. President Taft addresses the delegates late today.

John J. Diamond, first vice-president, of Philadelphia, presided. The credential committee reported that 411 delegates, a substantial portion of them women, were entitled to seats in the convention.

Next came the report of W. T. Gibbons, national secretary, which showed that the treasury had a balance of $20,486. J. J. Diamond, first vice-president, followed with a report, and J. Dixie Smith of Texas, organizer for eighteen southern States, reported large gains.

A lively clash came when Delegate Britt of St. Louis offered a motion for the appointment of a special committee to make changes in the constitution. A sharp debate followed. A point of order was raised to the effect that the matter came under the jurisdiction of the resolution committee. The chair ruled the point well taken. Delegate Britt appealed. The appeal was put to the delegates and the chair was sustained by a decisive vote.

Pedestrians along Summer street saw an exceptional sight, and for a short while the police in the vicinity of the Filene building were kept decidedly busy preventing a congestion of the thoroughfares. The cause of the excitement was the stalling of a Jackson runabout from the street to the fourth floor of the Filene building. The task being undertaken by a safe moving concern.

It was a stupendous undertaking owing to the wheel base of the car, its progress from the street to the fourth floor being slow but sure. Upon its arrival on a plane with the fourth floor it was necessary to turn the car end for end in order that it might enter the building, but that was done without any great difficulty.

The car was hoisted to the motor apparel department of the Filene Company, where for the next two weeks it will be one of the features of the new department in the new store. The Jackson car is being displayed through the courtesy of Manager Judd, local branch manager of the Jackson Company on boylston street.

George W. Perkins Will Write for the Boston American in Favor of Roosevelt

Read His First Article on This Page—Notice What He Says About "One Hundred and Thirty-five Years of Public Education

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner

At the beginning of the campaign this newspaper announced that it would print the news of all the parties, that the Hearst newspapers would support Wilson and that representatives of Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt would be invited to contribute to the paper as often as they chose and discuss their side of the campaign.

It will interest our readers to know that George W. Perkins, a man very successful in large affairs, now very prominent in the Roosevelt campaign, will discuss "the Bull Moose movement" with our readers and try to persuade them that they should vote for Roosevelt and the Bull Moose or Progressive party.

Mr. Perkins suggested at first that William Allen White, a distinguished writer of the Middle West, should undertake the task for the Roosevelt party. And the AMERICAN agreed to pay Mr. White a very comfortable salary for doing the work. Mr. White, however, felt that he could be more useful in his own home town working for Roosevelt and could not accept the invitation offered.

Thereupon Mr. Perkins, at our request, agreed to write as often as possible throughout the remainder of the campaign his ideas on politics, as a representative of the Progressive party, and his arguments in favor of the election of Roosevelt and Johnson.

Mr. Perkins has built up big industries and a big individual fortune. He is interested now in building up a new party, and our readers will be interested in his point of view and in his arguments.

There is truth and a very good idea in his statement that after a hundred and thirty-five years of public education it is about time for the people to show what education has done for them and to prove their ability to govern themselves.

The contention of Mr. Perkins and the others interested in the Roosevelt-Progressive movement is that the people do not govern themselves, but accept government from above.

Roosevelt may win and he may lose; there is no doubt that he is doing his share toward ripping up and tearing out old, fossilized ideas of government by party.

There is no doubt that he and those associated with him are appealing directly to the people AND RELYING ON THE PEOPLE FOR SUCCESS.

In the old days a man like Perkins, with a very large fortune and wide business connections, would have used his money to buy or hire politicians, office holders and the lower class of newspaper editors.

Now, instead of working behind closed doors in secret, through the power of money, Mr. Perkins appeals directly to the people, says what he thinks and signs his name to his opinions—and, by the way, is able to get them printed in the Hearst newspapers, circulating more than two millions of copies each day and read by at least six or eight millions of Americans.

The new method of publicity, of direct appeal to the people, is certainly an improvement on old style politics.

And Mr. Perkins and the cause that he represents will at least get a respectful hearing from our great army of readers.

Very soon we hope to announce the beginning of a series of articles by a competent, accredited representative of Mr. Taft's campaign.

We shall publish the important sayings of the various candidates. And we shall give space to those that are authorized to speak on their behalf—and our readers will make up their minds and vote accordingly—which is the right and the only way to run a republic.

"Give light and the people will find the road."

-:- To Eyes That See -:-

By N. P. BABCOCK.

ACROSS the bosom of the Western sky,
Their sails gold-tinted by the sinking sun,
A fleet of cloud-ships move, and you and I
Behold a race that's never lost or won.

Majestic is the spread of fleecy sails,
All spreading Southward to some ghostly port,
But as we watch, behold! the vision fails,
And naught is left save mass of clouds distort.

"Mine was the frigate with the streaming flag!
She led them all; she held my hopes," you cry.
The whole fleet now one vast and billowing rag
Draped meaningless in tatters o'er the sky.

"There was no race! There was no fleet," says one,
Who speaks in measured tone as from a book.
"I saw but clouds and the red setting sun,"
You saw no more? Then, friend, you did not look.

You see, perhaps, in shadows on the grass,
No more than sunshine blunted where it falls;
You see no race of lengthening giants pass
In mystic silence over garden walls?

You see in glowing embers on the grate
No more than fuel turning into ash?
No winking sprites? No blazing castle gate?
No red-clad pigmies storming window sash?

When raindrops scurry down the dripping pane
You see no fairies on toboggan slides?
You merely hear the patter of the rain?
You do not hear the fairy shrieks besides?

Does morning dew on shrubs no message bear
Of Night Queen having flitted to and fro,
And scattered diamonds from her raven hair
In nodding to the sleeping blooms below?

Does the fair sight of swaying, golden grain
Bring only thought of nations to be fed?
Or do you feel that all the pulsing plain
In some slow waltz is by Dame Ceres led?

* * *

To eyes that see, tho' no clear form appear,
Life lifts delights unknown to millions, who
Hold only what is "real" as worth their view,
Though God put Fancy for some purpose here.

Why Not—If He Can?

The Glory of the Skies

By WINIFRED BLACK

THE other day I went up to the mountain top.

It was a fair day in the valley, a day exceeding fair. All along the way the red Indian paint brushes stood like funny little patarnus, put there long ago to show gipsy feet the road to the summit. And beside them flowered the tall blue lupin and the bright yellow mountain furze, and as we went higher, through the sighing pines, into the region of the twisted cedars, past the quivering aspen groves, up, up beyond the line of timber, the blue forget-me-nots carpeted the upland meadows like great rugs of priceless wools. Blue, blue as the eyes of a new-born baby, blue as sapphire, blue as the sky on a June day in California, blue as forget-me-nots.

And a little pale girl sat among them and gathered bouquets to help pay for her living there in the hills where she hoped to find strength. And we all bought the bouquets and smiled into the shy eyes of the delicate child, and asked her what she called the dog who was her sturdy companion.

And some of us thought of healthy children of our own, happy at home, and some, I think, remembered children who had tried to live, too, and had failed.

Up we went, up and up to the top of the world, and there we saw the glory of the skies.

They were blue that day, as blue as the forget-me-nots, and far, far below us floated great fleets of snow-white clouds like icebergs adrift in a strange and silent sea. And some of us could not speak, and some sighed, and some, I know, wept for very joy at the great beauty of it all.

And one stood beside me and sniffed.

"Say," said she, "I don't see anything much here, do you?"

"Not a thing," said I, and then she told me the mountains were all a great fake, and she wished she had stayed at home.

"Spent a lot of money a'l for nothing," she said. "I'll know better next time, I'll tell you that."

And as we went down the mountain side we talked, and I found that she liked the town nearby "rather well."

"There are two picture shows there," she said, "and every night there's vaudeville, and a band concert twice a week, and lots of folks moving about all the time."

And we laughed together, the woman who sniffed and I, at the people who were "jay enough," that was the expression she used, to like the mountains, and the sky, and the fleets of clouds, and the fields of heavenly blue, and I suppose that women thinks she saw all there was to see in the mountains, too.

Poor, foolish, blind, deaf, dumb, half-living creature! Why, she never sees anything, she just thinks she sees.

What do such people get out of the world, I wonder? What a queer, mixed-up, foolish sort of place it must be to them all the time!

What fools they must think all the other people, or maybe they think the rest of us are just putting on when he like to see beauty instead of ugliness, glory instead of squalor!

I knew a man once who said he knew no one really liked to read, they just said they did to "put on."

I know another man who declares he can't see the difference between a dinner at a good restaurant and a "feed" at a cafeteria, "it's all grub," he says, "what's the difference, except the duty?" And he really means it, too.

All men are equal, says the old law—oh! if some law could only make them so. All men are equal, and one is blind, and one is deaf, and one is dull, and one is lame.

All men are equal, and all women, too—perhaps!

I wonder if the woman who couldn't see anything worth looking at on the mountain top thinks so, too?

George W. Perkins Writes of the Roosevelt Campaign

"Principles, Leaders and the Right Following Will Win.

"Powers Must Come Back to the People Once More.

"Public Education Has Prepared the Way for Government by the Public"

By GEORGE W. PERKINS

Mr. Hearst very kindly offered space in all of his newspapers for the presentation of arguments in favor of the Progressive party. My suggestion, as one deeply interested in the principles for which the party stands, was that Mr. William Allen White should, if possible, be persuaded to write the articles for the Hearst evening newspapers.

Unfortunately, Mr. White felt that his duty and his best field of work were in the country which has for years been the scene of his activity, and that he could not undertake the additional labor the writing of frequent articles would involve.

Therefore, at the request of the Hearst management, I have agreed to undertake to present from time to time some of the arguments and the facts which I sincerely believe must inevitably lead to the adoption by the people of the principles for which the Progressive party stands.

I do not pretend to any special art of writing. That is scarcely expected in a man who has devoted his life to business and business construction; but if it be true that "to convince others it is only necessary for you yourself to be convinced," I know that my sincere belief in the Progressive cause and my earnest conviction that its furtherance can be best secured by the election of Roosevelt and Johnson at this time will lend the power of conviction even to an inexperienced writer.

The Progressive party—new, vigorous, built upon public protest and intelligent public planning—with leaders of vast experience and integrity of purpose—begins life with the three great essentials—the three great forces necessary to every popular movement.

These three great forces are:
THE PRINCIPLES.
THE LEADERS.
THE FOLLOWING.

The principles of the party are clearly expressed in its platform adopted at the Chicago Convention on the 7th of last month, and are further set forth in the great speeches delivered at that convention by Theodore Roosevelt, Albert J. Beveridge and others, and in the pledges made by Messrs. Roosevelt and Johnson before the convention in accepting their respective nominations. All express the ambitions, the aspirations, the protests and the earnest purposes of the thinking American people of today. These principles back of the Progressive party express the needs and the wishes of the American people and, as they are discussed between now and November, are bound to find such a substantial following as to bring about their endorsement at the polls.

The Progressive party, because of the principles for which it stands and the character of its leaders, has a most enthusiastic, earnest and intelligent following, very like that which built up the first great Progressive party of liberty, protest and progress that took this country from the control of England and gave it to the control of the people living in the United States. It was the patriotic following of Washington—those who were called the revolutionists of their day—that gave to the people of America the control of their own nation and their own government.

Of late years, gradually but surely, the power has slipped away from the people, and the time has come to bring that power back to the people once more.

One hundred and thirty-five years ago on our Atlantic Coast our people declared in substance that, through the progress and evolution of the human race, they had reached a point where they no longer needed, nor was it any longer for their best spiritual and material welfare, to be ruled by a king.

It is almost impossible for us in this day and generation to realize the magnitude of the decision thus reached by our forefathers, the colossal nature of the progressive step those men took, the complete overturning of the then existing method of government, the revolutionary character of their act, the enormous responsibility—at least in the eyes of the people of that time—that was assumed in the name of the people.

In these one hundred and thirty-five years we have spent millions upon millions of dollars in the United States for the broadest and best educational system known to the world.

What has been the use of all this expenditure of one hundred and thirty-five years of time and millions of dollars if it has not prepared our people to take on even further responsibilities in the matter of self-government?

It seems rather inconsistent for the very men who have been giving such vast sums of money for the purpose of educating the people to protest now that the people cannot be trusted to properly use, in the matter of self-government, the very education that these men have helped to provide.

The boy is father to the man. You cannot spend millions of dollars educating the boy without having millions of questions to answer from the man.

COURAGE

By REGINALD LUCAS

OF all the boons the gods can give,
This one I ask and ask in vain,
Well satisfied if I might live
My life, as it was lived, again.

Its faults and failures I confess,
Of cares and griefs its ample store;
From evils past I shrink the less
As dreading future ills me more.

And yet this were the coward's part;
"Go forward"—there's our duty clear;
The humble and the contrite heart
Knows not ingratitude or fear.

For this were man's most shameful lot,
To lie in an unhonored grave,
Even those who loved him daring not
To claim for him that he was brave.
